A LETTER FROM THE UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT

DEAR ALUMNI:

One of the advantages to being appointed President of Saint Mary's University is the opportunity it affords me to make contact, once again, with those students with whom I have been associated over the many years of my tenure at Saint Mary's.

Many of you will, perhaps, not even remember the young Philosophy teacher who began his career at Saint Mary's in 1946, and who progressively through the years had less and less contact with the bulk of the student body. Still, there are very few remaining on the staff who have had my opportunity to watch Saint Mary's grow into the present strong institution which now exists in the south end of Halifax.

There are many exciting things happening on campus, and it is my opinion that our potential is now reaching the point of explosion. You will have read elsewhere of the $3,500,000. Student Residence which is beginning to rise on the southeast corner of the campus, of the large addition to our Science Building, prospects for another five storeys to the Student Centre, Library development, and so forth.

What is, however, of far greater importance than the physical development is the significant increase in high quality professors and multiplication of interesting courses. The Faculty, of course, and the library are the lifeblood of any university, and, although the latter still lags far behind our objective, the Faculty is rapidly reaching the point where we are proud to say that few universities of our size can boast of anything better. We have added approximately thirty new professors to our staff this year, and we are anticipating another twenty or twenty-five for the coming year.

Our M.A. programmes are either off the ground or are on the verge of being implemented within another year or so. You will be happy to hear that our Mathematics Department has developed into one of the strongest areas in the University under Professor Frank Jackson, and the increased facilities in our Science Building have given an impetus to developments in that area.

On December 8, J. Philip Vaughan, chairman of the Annual Fund Committee, presented a cheque for $8,000 to Dr. Henry Labelle, S.J. as our first installment on the $25,000 pledge for the rink.

The announcement of an Institute on Values has afforded us new opportunities for experimentation in our Arts Faculty, and will give us an opportunity to implement new ideas, which was impossible to us in the past.

It may also interest you to know that there is a quickening of interest in Theology, and, under the direction of our new Chairman of that Department, Father Patrick Kerans, new and exciting prospects lie before us.

Co-operation is the order of the day in the various institutions of Halifax. We are at present trying to solve the problem of co-operation with Mount Saint Vincent University, and even the Seminary and the Sacred Heart Convent are involved in these negotiations.

I am delighted to note the increased interest of the alumni in the development of Saint Mary's, and I point particularly to the project presented to us here by the Executive of the New England branch of the Alumni Association. They propose the formation of a club for New Englanders who are still undergraduates at Saint Mary's, the purpose of which would be to stimulate interest in alumni affairs.

It is also gratifying to inform you that more and more of our alumni are coming back to us in various capacities, both admin-

NEW RESIDENCE UNDER CONSTRUCTION

Come next September, students attending Saint Mary's University will be able to live in an apartment suite, shop for groceries, visit the laundromat and doctor's office, and even go for a swim, all in the same building.

Dr. Henry J. Labelle, President of the University, announced today that construction will commence immediately on the construction of a $4 million residence complex. The multi-million dollar expansion, in the planning stages for months, has been directed and coordinated by the Development Office under the direction of Edmund Morris, Assistant to the President.

The new residence, which has both aesthetic and functional aspects, has been carefully designed. It will be built in the south-east end of the University campus with access from Gorsebrook Avenue and Tower Road. This complex will lie just south of the main sports field and will consist of a 17-storey high-rise on the east end and four, four-storey low-rise units flanked on the western end by a two-storey structure, housing the swimming pool, dining room and kitchen facilities.

Each floor above the ground floor of the high-rise will contain six suites; each of these suites containing two double bedrooms, a living room-study, a kitchenette and a private bath. Along with double staircase, the tower will also be served by two 2,500 pound capacity express elevators operating at 300 feet per minute. They will be automatically geared to stop at the ground, 4th, 7th, 10th, 13th and 16th floors. This is a deliberate effort to encourage students to mix and to avoid the development of artificial barriers to student integration.

Students being housed in the high-rise will be charged $460 without meals, since the kitchenette in each suite makes meal preparation possible. Each will be equipped with a 10 cu. foot refrigerator, a 24 in. stove and a sink. These students may also eat any meal in the dining room a la carte, if they prefer.

In the low-rise, on each of the three floors above the ground floor in the four, four-storey units, there will be three apartments or "responsibility units". Each of these three responsibility units on each floor contains two double bedrooms, two single bedrooms and a private bath. There is a shared common room on each floor for the use of the 18 students on the floor of that unit. Since there are no cooking facilities within the low-rise buildings, students in these accommodations will eat in the restaurant at a total room-and-board cost of $800 for a double and $850 for a single room.

The ground floor area in the low-rise will contain a mini-market where fresh fruit, vegetables and meats, as well as canned and small dry goods, may be bought by those with kitchen facilities.

A music-listening room, a music-practice room, a typing room and a tuck shop for magazines, pens and toiletries will also be available.

On the ground level of the high-rise there will be an interdenominational chapel and trunk storage.

On the ground floor of the two-storey structure to the west of the low-rise, a swimming pool (40 feet by 20 feet) will be equipped with a diving board, lockers (for both men and women) and showers. Near the pool will be a large recreation room, while the second storey will house a dining room with a seating capacity of 320.

Additional space will provide students and faculty with semi-private dining facilities for approximately 24 people.

With the completion of the low-rise units (September '68) the fourth and fifth floor of the present north-wing residence will be reconstructed to provide faculty offices and seminar rooms with the addition of an elevator.

Completion of the high-rise is scheduled approximately 120 days later. The remaining north-wing residence accommodations will thereafter be converted to offices and displaced students will move into the high-rise. This reconstruction is expected to cost approximately $200,000.

With the opening of the dining facilities in the low-rise in September, all students and faculty will eat there, except for the Jesuit Fathers for whom facilities will be maintained in the administration building. The present students' dining hall in the main building will be closed.

Special consideration has been given paraplegic students who are housed in the second floor of the old residence. They will continue to have access to dining facilities in the main building. This is a temporary arrangement, since the high-rise which is equipped with elevators should be available for these students by the second term. The low-rise without the elevator service would be inconvenient for the paraplegic student.

Throughout its planning, the university has been in close consultation with the Canadian Paraplegic Association. There will be beds of a special height, specially designed light switches and sockets, extra width doors, and grab bars in the washrooms.

Both the high and low-rise units will have broadloom in the corridors and built-in beds convertible to day couches. There will be no bunks. Under each bed will be a set of drawers. Each student will have a desk with drawers, shelves, a tack board and a closet with a clothes rod, shelves and sliding doors. A flexible light fixture will be mounted over each desk in such a way that it can also be for reading in bed.

Double glazed windows will be equipped with screens and horizontal sliding vents.

Each apartment will have an inter-com phone, and a private telephone jack will also be stationed throughout the complex. Each apartment in the high-rise will also be equipped with a T.V. connectors to special antennas on the roof. The common rooms in the low-rise will also have T.V. connectors.

The entire complex is designed to accommodate 612 students with 232 living in the six person low-rise responsibility units and 380 housed in four person suites equipped with kitchenette in the high-rise. There will be no usable living or recreational space in the basement area.

HAMPTON COURT

By James L. Ryan

In the Adelphi Theatre in London, the musical comedy, "Charlie Girl" has been enjoying a very successful run for more than five years. The theme of the play is a 'spoof' on tourism in Britain. The opening number is a song entitled 'The Most Ancestral Home of All'. How fitting! for within fourteen miles of this very theatre, is the palace of Hampton Court, one of the most beautiful, and certainly from an historical point of view, one of the most interesting 'ancestral' homes in all England.

Although it first came to prominence with Cardinal Wolsey, Hampton Court Palace was the site of a manor house from Saxon times. It was known on the taxation rolls at the time of the Norman Conquest and is listed in the Domesday Book. In 1514

Provision has been made in both design and land use for the subsequent construction of an additional high-rise unit of 22 storeys immediately east of the 17-storey tower. This could be done without coming into conflict with density regulations since the project is expected to cover 3.5 acres of university land.

There will be off-street parking area for 73 cars for residents and visitors. The building itself will be furnished with fire retardant window draperies along with sprinkler and fire alarm systems.

The whole project was built up for the University by a design team assembled by Centennial Properties Ltd. of Halifax. President Ralph Medjuck brought Prof. Howard Adelman of York University, an internationally-recognized authority on university students' residences, to Saint Mary's where he developed the basic concept for the project after several visits during which he talked with students and university administrators. This basic plan was then detailed by the University Development Office with a design and construction group convened by Mr. Medjuck and approved by Dr. Labelle and by the Board of Governors and University Corporation.

Contractor is the Foundation Company of Canada. Architects are Tambold and Wells. John Wood will be resident architect for construction. Structural and mechanical engineers are Blauer Associates, Montreal, and Sutherland, Wilkinson Bradstock and Associates, Toronto. C. A. Fowler, Bauld and Mitchell are supervising architects, and E. J. Flinn of MacInnes, Wilson and Hallett solicitor for the project for the University.

Les Goodwin

HUSKIES WIN CHAMPIONSHIP

By Bob Kane

Basketball fever reached a peak never before attained on the expanding campus of St. Mary's recently as the Huskies lured the coveted Read Cup, emblematic of intercollegiate basketball supremacy in the Maritimes, to their showcase for the first time.

Les Goodwin's maroon and white quintet, thwarted the year before by University of New Brunswick Red Raiders in a sudden-death play-off for the crown, were not to be denied by a determined Dalhousie aggregation in a similar situation this season.

Both the Huskies and the Tigers, their cross-town rivals, finished the regular campaign with identical 9-3 records. The two clubs met in neutral Acadia University's War Memorial Gym, Mar. 2 for the title and S.M.U. came out on top by a narrow 51-50 margin.

It was only fitting that these two teams should have met for the silverware. They split their two meetings during the regular schedule by the narrowest of margins—Dal winning at home 69-68 and the Huskies edging the Tigers on their home court 72-70 in the final game before the playoff.

A wild, screaming throng of 2,100 sat in on the tense encounter and when the final buzzer sounded the jubilant S.M.U. supporters carried members of the victorious Huskies off the floor. And, holding to tradition, it wasn't long before Les Goodwin ended up in the showers alongside his players.

Goodwin, who first arrived on the scene via New Jersey for the 1963-64 season, mentioned to this writer at that time he felt it would be four or five years before they would probably win the league. His plan was to build a contender gradually and mould a championship team. This year it paid off, his fifth at St. Mary's.

However, much of the credit must go to the team and in particular to a player who graduates this spring after four brilliant years with the club. That would be Jimmy Daniels, a 6-1 senior from Linden, N. J., who owns just about every team scoring record. Daniels won the conference scoring crown the past two years and this season finished third. In his second last game he went over the 1,800 point mark, a record never before reached.

About the only mark he failed to attain was most points scored in one game. The record is 60 and was established by the incomparable Bob Lahey of Lewiston, Me. in his senior year, 1964.

The Huskies finished the season with their best overall record ever, 17-4, boosting Goodwin's five year chart at S.M.U. to 79-32 for a .712 percentage. It was the 38th year of coaching for Goodwin and his lifetime record stands at a remarkable 589 victories against only 249 defeats.

So, in the sports corner of this issue our hats are off to Les Goodwin, his able assistant, Dick MacLean, and the basketball Huskies for a great all-round effort.

ADDITION TO CHEMISTRY-BIOLOGY BUILDING

Dr. Henry J. Labelle, President of Saint Mary's University, announced that the University has awarded the contract for construction of a three-storey addition to its Chemistry-Biology Building to Kenney Construction Co. Ltd., Yarmouth and Halifax, which submitted the lowest of five bids.

Value of the contract is approximately $1,000,000. Construction, to commence immediately, will be completed in time for the next September's academic session.

The addition will add 41,000 square feet of general academic space, including a lecture theatre and 26 seminar and classrooms, to the present two-storey laboratories building. Provision will be made throughout the three new floors for their ultimate use as additional laboratory spaces for chemistry and biology.

When completed, the five-storey laboratories building will connect with the north wing of the University's main building by means of an overhead bridge.

The building addition will be equipped with audiovisual teaching aids and a full-height elevator.

Architects are C. A. Fowler, Bauld & Mitchell.

NINE APPOINTED GOVERNORS OF SAINT MARY'S

Nine appointments to the Board of Governors of Saint Mary's University were announced by Most Rev. James M. Hayes, Chancellor and Dr. Henry Labelle, S.J., president.

Those appointed were: Keith Bishop, Dr. William Bridgeo, Luke Feetham, Rt. Rev. James Granville, John Lynch, Gordon Mader, A. C. Milner, Alban Murphy, and Allen Stockall.

Those appointed for a further three year term were: Hon. R. A. Donahoe, Dr. Maurice Keating, and Mr. Justice Vincent Pottier.

COLLEGE FOR DARTMOUTH PROPOSED

Possibility of building a junior college in Dartmouth is being studied by Saint Mary's University.

Dartmouth Alderman Allan Stockall and his special junior college sub-committee are negotiating construction feasibility with university president Dr. Henry Labelle.

"We will report to city council as soon as our investigations are complete," he said.

It was the first indication that a university had shown interest in the idea.

Dartmouth has a school population of 17,000. Potential candidates for enrolment in the proposed junior college would come from the estimated 10,000 junior and senior high school students in Dartmouth metropolitan area, and surrounding districts.

Alderman Stockall did not give any indication where the college could be built. Brightwood Golf Club had been suggested, but was not being considered as a possible location at the moment.

Cardinal Wolsey recognized the suitability of the site as one on which to build his own palatial country residence. At that time, Wolsey was at the height of his career and had achieved the position of Lord Chancellor of England, a position roughly similar to the present office of Prime Minister. He was also Bishop of five separate Sees and in addition, was the Pope's permanent legate in England. Wolsey leased the property from the then holders, the Knights of St. John. He tore down whatever buildings that stood there and began to build what still stands today as a masterpiece of Tudor architecture.

Wolsey's vast ability and driving energy resulted in a splendid home, which was renowned in the Courts of Europe. To furnish his palace, he secured the cities of the world for works of art and lined the walls of its rooms with magnificent tapestries in gold and silver, some of which are still to be seen.

At this period, Wolsey was, for all practical purposes, the ruler of England under the then youthful Henry VIII. He was determined to conduct the business of state in surroundings which could not fail to impress visiting dignitaries, whom he could accommodate in excellent style even to the number of six hundred. But Wolsey's decline in favor and his failure to secure Henry's divorce was not ameliorated by the greatness which he had achieved for England, and he became a ruined and doomed man. His death shortly afterwards, saved him from trial and almost certain execution.

Henry VIII had become jealous of the magnificence of Hampton Court and he acquired the palace from Wolsey, who, in a final desperate bid for favour, made a gift of it to Henry. The king, with all the resources of the monarchy behind him, immediately began an immense expansion of the Palace and added considerably to Wolsey's original structure. The records of the times, among other things, make frequent references to the accommodations which were being prepared for Anne Boleyn, who was soon to become his second Queen.

For over two hundred years of English history, Hampton Court was 'where the action was'; it was the scene of many great occasions of state; it had watched the coming and going of foreign ambassadors; it had witnessed many councils and although it was essentially a country residence, it had been the center of much of the business of state. Henry, with his insatiable appetite for possessions, drove his Palace to completion. Yet, ironically enough, there is very little evidence existing today to tell what his completed Palace really looked like.

Hampton Court remained the favorite and principal residence of English monarchs from Henry VIII until George II. It is indelibly associated with the English history of that time. Even more so, it remains today an outstanding example of Tudor palatial architecture.

Yet much of Henry's additions to Hampton Court came under the destructive plans of William and Mary, who employed Sir Christopher Wren to plan and execute the splendid addition to Hampton Court in the then popular Renaissance style. To do this, most of that portion of the Palace which was built by Henry, was unceremoniously destroyed. Very little is now known about it, only the sketchiest outlines of the Palace are preserved in the drawings of Sir Christopher Wren.

Fortunately however, much of Wolsey's original Palace remains unchanged, though it too had been destined for destruction by William in order to complete the final stages of his great new palace which was never to come about. Thus, we have today, in one continuous building the splendid red brick Tudor Gothic Palace standing as it was built in 1515 by Cardinal Wolsey, contiguous with the French Renaissance State Apartments created by Christopher Wren for William and Mary. The untimely death of William prevented further demolition from taking place, so that by this rather fortunate accident of fate, Wolsey's Palace with its quaint and mediaeval features, remains very much as it was in his own time.

There are preserved in the Public Records Office in London all of the exchequer accounts relative to the building of Hampton Court in the 16th century. It is possible to read the day-to-day expenditures, the names of workmen, the amounts paid and the tasks performed, all of which are contained in scrupulously kept accounts—these in their own way, revealing much of the life of the times. There is also in existence at Oxford University and elsewhere, the drawings of Sir Christopher Wren, an entirely new Palace, never completed. A series of these drawings show the evolution of the principal facades proceeding from the original and tentative plans to the final designs which were followed in the final construction.

Hampton Court exists today as a relic of 16th century life, standing on a splendid bend in the River Thames, just west of the city of London and within the sounds of the jet-liners of the London Airport. Its spacious parks are the delight of visitors. Its formal gardens are laid out much as they were in the times of Elizabeth, little changed over the years. It is possible to inspect the State Apartments of William and to walk along the 'Haunted Gallery' which is associated with the tragedy of Catherine Howard. It is also possible, among other things, to retrace the steps of the procession which attended the coronation of the ill-fated boy king, Edward VI, Henry's only son.
