

THE CHAPLAINCY: "SOLID GROUND AMID THE CHAOS OF CAMPUS LIFE"

Rev. John Pace

There were parts of Belfast that Rev. John Pace never saw when he was growing up simply because he was a Protestant.

"One time", he says, "I remember coming home from Cubs. I was grabbed by a bunch of kids and dragged into an alley and asked to repeat the Lord's Prayer. I knew if I said it wrong I'd have been beaten up. I wasn't so I must have said it right".

Later he was a passenger in a street car that was machine-gunned.

Today, he leads a less turbulent life as pastor of the Presbyterian Church of St. David on Grafton Street, and a part-time Protestant Chaplain at Saint Mary's.

He sees his role here as fostering some sort of Protestant identity on campus, maybe in the form of a "club", or perhaps like a pastor and his congregation—the congregation being the students. He feels "the chaplain should be the solid ground amid the chaos of campus life. And my door is open to anyone, of any denomination, who needs help".

But he feels frustration too. "I don't think any university takes its chaplains seriously; it's the same for hospitals, and maybe that's as much our fault as it is the institutions".

Mr. Pace came to Saint Mary's because he wanted to get involved with young people.

"Most of the congregation at St. David's is older. I'm concerned about young people and alcohol. I'm not a teetotaler and I'm not talking about not drinking at all, but I am talking about being responsible".

He's the author of "It's My Life", a pamphlet that deals with decision making. And he was the co-author of "Coffee, Tea and Me", a drug addiction pamphlet.

Mr. Pace attended public and secondary schools in Northern Ireland. He received a Bachelor of Arts degree from McMaster University in Hamilton, in 1961.

He graduated from Knox College, University of Toronto, with a first-class Bachelor of Divinity Degree in 1964, and was awarded a post-graduate scholarship for further study.

Mr. Pace's office on the campus is located in the Student Centre, off the T.V. room (Room 301).

It's a natural concern because Mr. Pace worked for many years at the Addiction Research Foundation, in London, Ontario. There, he was co-director of a "Stabilization Unit" for young drug abusers, and worked as a community consultant in the field of addictions. In Kitchener, he implemented programs relating to drug use and abuse. And more recently, he has worked with the Nova Scotia Commission on Drug Dependency.

But that's only part of his varied background, which includes jobs as a teller for the Royal Bank of Canada, credit manager for the Hamilton Spectator (a daily newspaper with a circulation of more than 100,000) and, finally, a clergyman with the Presbyterian Church of Canada.

He has had two hymns published and recorded by Vanguard Publishing Company. He's established and directed two musical groups which focused on new forms of communication in worship.

1978: YEAR OF THE HORSE

If you hate snakes, and 1977 was a bad year, you could console yourself by recalling that, after all, 1977 was the year of the serpent on the lunar calendar.

According to most Chinese, that particular superstition is unfounded. But they still believe that the animals of the lunar calendar can shape events, and even mold the personalities of those born in particular years. And to the Chinese, these beliefs have as much credibility as we ascribe to the astrology charts.

So while Gemini's, Leo's, and Libra's and the like are busy pouring over horoscopes, the Chinese are pondering 1978 as the year of the Horse, and 1979 as the year of the Ram.

This year, members of the Chinese Students Association will celebrate the New Year in the Multi-Purpose Room on February 4. (New Year's Eve on the lunar calendar is actually February 6). The festivities will include a lion dance, a candle dance, a Chinese Culture dance, a Kung Fu demonstration, a Chinese play, a choir, and of course plenty of traditional Chinese food.

The celebration gets started at 7 p.m. Tickets cost $4 for members of the Association, and $6 for non-members.

The Chinese Students Association has 130 members.

SAINT MARY'S UNIVERSITY AND COMMUNITY EDUCATION

by Jim Lotz

Like most creative ventures, the course being given this year by Saint Mary's University in downtown Halifax on "Literature in Atlantic Canada" arose from the co-operative efforts of two people dedicated to community education.

John Battye, Director of Continuing Education at Saint Mary's has been trying to get the university into the centre of Halifax to reach people who want to learn during their lunch hours. Joan Brown-Hicks, community services co-ordinator of the Halifax City Regional Library, has been organizing lectures in the library at lunch time to meet the needs of various groups. The idea of a university lecture series arose out of informal discussions between the two people. Battye agreed to find a lecturer, and to arrange for registration for those who wanted to take the course for credit. Joan Brown-Hicks found a room in the library, organized chairs and coffee, and did the publicity. Professor Ken MacKinnon, Chairman of the English Department at Saint Mary's volunteered to give the course, and about thirty—forty people have been turning up regularly at noon time on Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

MacKinnon, who comes from Prince Edward Island, is knowledgeable, enthusiastic, and friendly. Those attending the lectures are mainly women; only one or two are of average university age, and many are grey haired. Their dedication and enthusiasm for the course is obvious to anyone who drops by the library. MacKinnon takes the group through Atlantic Canadian literature from its beginning to popular fiction by Lucy Maud Montgomery and Dan Ross, in addition to covering Haliburton, Carman, Pratt, MacLellan, Buckler, Cogswell, and Nowlan. MacKinnon also discusses new writers like David Richards and Alistair MacLeod. Nor does he omit folk poets, and such "dreadful bards" as James D. Gillis.

MacKinnon is acutely aware that he is offering the academic equivalent of "ten European capitals in twelve days", and his task is made more difficult by the fact that no anthology of Atlantic Canadian literature exists. In all, MacKinnon gives about fifty lectures between September 20 and April 5, and finds the experience enjoyable, but "exhausting and demanding". With a captive audience of students, he can devote three lectures to one novel. In this course, he can only devote one talk to even the most important novels. His audience is much more sophisticated than students—"they have been reading", MacKinnon notes.

He relates Atlantic Canadian literature to the people and communities that his listeners know. Quoting Allan Donaldson's poetry, he conjures up the atmosphere of Fredericton, but he also puts the regional writings into international context, relating the images and experiences of local poets to those of T. S. Eliot and Wallace Stevens.

This course is anticipating many of the problems that universities will face in the future, as they start running out of high school students and have to redirect their efforts to meeting the needs of "mature students".

Canadian literature is becoming a boom industry, and something more is needed to tell people about their cultural and literary heritage than simply adding another course to the traditional curriculum, and expecting students to take it as a duty, or as a contribution to national unity. There's a need for universities to reach out in the way that Saint Mary's is doing, and to meet the needs of the many people in the community who are eager to learn, but can't afford the time or the money to take university courses for credit on campus.

MacKinnon's broad and eclectic approach is an ideal way for a newcomer, or someone who knows the literature, to approach Atlantic Canadian literature. It adds depth to existing knowledge, while broadening people's horizons. Through it, people are discovering and rediscovering the poets, novelists, and essayists of this Region.

While I was talking with Joan Brown-Hicks, a woman phoned. Her sister down in the Valley had heard about the course, and was particularly interested in the lecture on Ernest Buckler. Could she bring her tape-recorder in for this lecture, so that she could send her sister a tape? Joan said she'd check with Ken MacKinnon and arrange it.

This low-key, community-oriented approach to Canadian literature is in marked contrast to some of the flamboyant and expensive schemes being used to promote Canadian books and writings. Canada now spends about eleven billion dollars each year, on broadcasting, and what is labelled "cultural activities".

There's a vast audience in the community who want to learn about their country and their heritage, and who can be reached through the sort of approach taken by Saint Mary's. One woman summed up the whole goal of community education when I asked her why she was taking the course. She said simply "I enjoy it".

The first contact most people have with Saint Mary's University is by telephone. Pictured above are two full-time operators, Mrs. Pauline Fougere and her daughter Donna Fougere. Pauline and Donna service two switchboards—one servicing calls for the academic offices and the other for administration and other staff. Pauline has worked at the switchboard for 12 years and Donna for 7 years. On a busy day they process an estimated 1500 calls.

CANADA COUNCIL FELLOWSHIP AWARDS

Dr. John R. MacCormack

Dr. John R. MacCormack, Professor of History and Director of the Institute of Human Values at Saint Mary's University, has been awarded a leave fellowship by the Canada Council. The fellowship will enable Dr. MacCormack, his wife and family, to spend the 1978-79 academic year in England where he will carry out further research for a book on values and freedom.

He is approaching the subject from an historical and cross-cultural point of view and his work will explore the contribution of Judaeo-Christian and Graeco-Roman value systems to the development of freedom in the west as compared and contrasted with the impact of Confucianism on Chinese institutions. He will carry out his research in the British Museum, the Cambridge University Library, and the School of Oriental and African Studies of the University of London.

The primary goal of the Institute of Human Values is to demonstrate the interdependence of knowledge, values and freedom, and Dr. MacCormack hopes that his book will help to clarify this relationship.

Dr. MacCormack is a graduate of Dalhousie and of the University of Toronto, and is the author of Revolutionary Politics in the Long Parliament published by Harvard University Press in 1973.

During his absence Dr. Arthur P. Monahan, Professor of Philosophy, will take over the direction of the Institute of Human Values.

OBSERVATORY TOURS

February is a good month for a visit to the Michael W. Burke-Gaffney Observatory atop the Loyola Building

Mars, Jupiter and Saturn can be seen during the entire month. Even the moons of Saturn and Jupiter are visible, and you'll also see the atmosphere surrounding these planets.

Mars, the "Red Planet" of science fiction, is visible, but relatively small compared to Jupiter and Saturn.

Saturn is perhaps the most spectacular sight because of its mysterious "rings".

But Jupiter has a "red spot" that still is one of the major mysteries of the solar system. The "spot" has been visible since the time of Galileo, however, during the past year it has almost faded, and is becoming increasingly harder to see. One theory says it is an area of rising warm gas, a swirling "storm" whipped up by the rotation of the planet.

A more familiar constellation to look for is Orion; usually visible even to the naked eye.

You'll also be able to see, with the help of the telescope in the Constellation Andromeda, a "nearby" galaxy some two million light years away.

Contrary to popular opinion, the best time for moon-gazing is not when the moon is full. Instead, turn the telescope toward the lunar surface around the middle of the month. February 11 or the 18—just before and after the first quarter—are the best days.

The sixteen-inch reflecting telescope at the Observatory is the largest optical telescope in Atlantic Canada.

Regular Observatory tours are scheduled for Saturday nights. If you're interested, go to room 152 of the Loyola Building at 7 p.m. Be sure to dress warmly because the temperature is the same as the outside and it's usually windy.

You can arrange special tours by calling 422-7361, local 255.

The Observatory technician, Randall Brooks, is usually available during the week. He also alternates with other members of the Astronomy Department in conducting the Saturday tours. Mr. Brooks has been at Saint Mary's since 1971, and with the Observatory since it opened in 1972. He holds a Masters degree in Astronomy from the University of Waterloo.

STUDENTS PREPARE UNIVERSITY NEWS

Anne Marie Bridgeo, second year accounting major, is Saint Mary's representative on the student committee working on the 'University News' page which is being published fortnightly by the Halifax Mail Star. The feature began on a trial basis in November, and indications are that it will continue until the end of the school year.

The page presents news, articles, pictures and a calendar of events concerning the six institutions of higher education in Halifax. Students making up the committee are from Dalhousie, Mount Saint Vincent, Saint Mary's, Nova Scotia College of Art and Design, King's College and Nova Scotia Technical College.

Through 'University News', students hope to make people in the community more aware of the happenings at colleges and universities in Halifax.

Anyone wishing to contribute articles for the page should contact Anne Marie Bridgeo (phone 422-5720).

SCIENCE SATURDAY FOR STUDENTS AND TEACHERS

On February 11, the Faculty of Science will be hosting a Science Saturday for high school students and teachers.

Invitations have been extended to high schools within a sixty-mile radius of the Halifax-Dartmouth area. Approximately 200 visitors are expected.

Faculty members and students from the Departments of Astronomy, Biology, Chemistry, Geology, Physics and Psychology and the Division of Engineering will be presenting lectures and demonstrations in their specialties. Dr. David DuPuy, Director of the M. W. Burke-Gaffney Observatory, will present the luncheon talk "What Astronomers Do". The day will conclude with a tour of the Observatory.

Science Saturday is part of the Science Faculty's program for strengthening liaison with high school students and teachers.

A questionnaire has been sent to all SMU employees to discover their views regarding such a group.

Anyone who has not filled out the questionnaire may still do so and return it to Shirley Buckler, General Office, MM101.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

In the Spring of 1976, Saint Mary's University implemented the first phase of its energy conservation program.

A recent report, analyzing the consumption of fuel and electricity for the period 1974-77, notes a reduction of approximately 9% in total fuel consumption and approximately 19% in electrical energy.

Guy Noel, Director of University Services, stated that these reductions were realized as a result of the implementation of the following measures:

An internal awareness campaign which pointed out the cost of energy and requested cooperation in reducing consumption, increased boiler efficiency through increasing the cleaning of boilers from once a year to four times a year, reducing the number of days of operation of the heating systems, reducing inside temperatures where feasible, reducing building temperatures during the Christmas recess, reducing corridor lighting, and conversion from incandescent to fluorescent lighting systems.

"The second phase of the University's program," Mr. Noel said, "involves a study of the feasibility of computerized control of the heating and ventilating systems."

CMHC SCHOLARSHIPS 1978-1979

Scholarships for 1978/79 will be awarded by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for full-time study in various fields related to housing and the housing environment. Scholarships are awarded for one year, starting in September 1978. The eligibility of a proposed program will be determined by CMHC on the basis of the relevance of the program to housing and the housing environment.

To qualify for a scholarship, candidates must be Canadian citizens or have become landed immigrants in Canada no later than September 15, 1976. As the program is funded by the Canadian Government, CMHC scholars may not hold awards from any other Government of Canada source, including the Canada Council, the National Research Council and other government agencies and Crown Corporations.

With the permission of CMHC, holders of CMHC scholarships may accept additional fellowship assistance from sources other than the Government of Canada.

The scholarship program is divided into two competitions—the University Competition which is available to students applying through a university for support in a graduate degree program—the Open Competition which is available to individuals wishing to broaden their knowledge, develop specialized skills or conduct studies in areas of concern to CMHC by applying directly to CMHC for support of an individually-designed program of study.

University Scholarship Competition

CMHC is especially interested in social, physical, economic and management concerns when they relate to understanding and dealing with housing in its urban and regional environment. To be considered for an award, the program of study must relate specifically to one or other of these areas of concern.

Over the twelve-month period, the holder of a University Scholarship will receive a personal allowance of $5,100 plus cost of travel from residence to place of study, university tuition fees and $900 for each dependent child. Payment of benefits is made in three equal installments covering the periods September-December, January-April and May-August. Payment is made only as long as the scholar is a full-time graduate student in good standing as certified by the university. The student may apply for renewal as many as three times.

The awards are made through a national competition to candidates of demonstrated ability and high academic promise. These are selected by a national committee of award which includes distinguished members of the business, government and academic communities.

A scholarship awarded for study in one program cannot be transferred for study in a different program or university.

Application must be submitted on the official 1978/79 form, through the university in which the candidate proposes to enroll. Officials of that university must recommend the candidate and transmit the completed application to CMHC. Applications will NOT be accepted by CMHC directly from candidates in the University Scholarship competition.

Applications must be sent to CMHC by the university not later than March 15, 1978. Candidates are urged to submit all documents to the university well before the end of February, to provide the time needed by the university to process the application.

Awards in the University Scholarship competition will be announced in May 1978.

Open Scholarship Competition

The Open Scholarship competition is intended to stimulate imaginative and original programs of study directed to five areas of concern to CMHC: housing and residential community improvement, planning and delivery of housing in remote areas, housing program analysis and evaluation, the supply and servicing of land, and community design. To be considered for an award, an individual program must be developed in specific relation to one or other of these areas of concern.

The program of study may be entirely self-directed or carried out from an institutional base. In either case, the program of work and the measures of its progress must be fully described in the application.

If an applicant proposes to enroll in a graduate degree program, then the application will not be considered in the Open Competition or transferred to the University Competition by CMHC.

The Open Scholarship offers an award of $3,000 for each four-month module of full-time study. Up to three modules may be taken, for a total period of twelve-months' full-time study for the full award of $9,000.

Students who are awarded scholarships for two or three study modules (each of four-months' duration) need not take them consecutively; but they must be taken within a period of two years starting in September 1978. There are no renewals offered to this scholarship.

Application in the Open Scholarship competition must be made directly to CMHC on the official 1978/79 form. Award will be made on the basis of the documents provided by the candidate and interview of the candidate by a national committee of award.

Completed applications must be sent by the applicant directly to CMHC not later than March 15, 1978. Preparation of an application takes a considerable amount of time and prospective candidates are urged to start the process early. Incomplete applications will not be accepted for consideration of award.

Awards in the Open Scholarship competition will be announced in June 1978.

A REMINDER: ARTS FORUM

The purpose of the Arts Forum is twofold: 1) to provide a regular opportunity for Arts students and faculty members to meet on an informal basis; and 2) to promote discussion of issues and ideas that are either of current interest or which arise out of a student's course work or a faculty member's research. The format of the meeting consists of a brief (ten to twenty minute) initial presentation by one or two individuals followed by one or more small group discussions depending on the number of people in attendance.

A cash bar is always provided. Regular meetings are held every other Friday at 3:30 p.m. Arts Forum meetings can also be scheduled at other times to take advantage of university lectures, visiting scholars, musical or theatrical performances, or any other appropriate event.

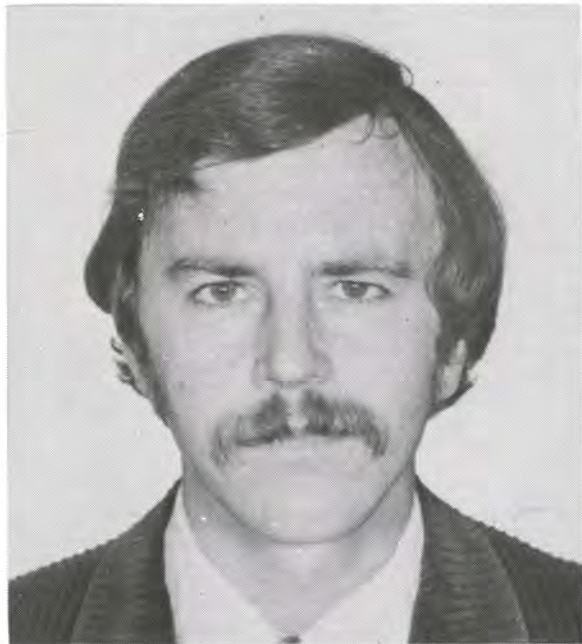

Dr. A. Monahan is the faculty representative for Arts Forum activities. Linda Jefferson, Bob Adduci, and Fraser Green are the student representatives. Suggestions for Arts Forum activities are always welcome.

The last meeting was held on January 20th. Dr. Richard Beis presented a paper entitled, "St. Thomas Aquinas and Extra-Marital Sex, or Where We Are Today and How We Got There".

RESULTS OF BALLOT TO BE PRESENTED TO CONFERENCE ON NOVEL

What are the best Canadian novels?

That's a question some people may dismiss as unanswerable, but it is implied whenever teachers and scholars of Canadian literature choose novels for study. Time is limited and selection is vast so that they must choose for their students or their research a sample of what they think are the most significant works in the development of the Canadian novel.

Identifying Canada's major novels will be among the problems examined at the Conference on the Canadian Novel, being held February 15 to 18 at The University of Calgary.

The results of a nation-wide poll to select "the 100 major Canadian novels" will be announced at the final session of the conference, to be attended by many of Canada's most outstanding novelists, critics, and educators. The poll is being conducted by Malcolm Ross, a noted critic and professor of English at Dalhousie University in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Each delegate to the conference has been sent a ballot, drawn up by Ross, containing a list of 200 titles from which the delegate is to choose the 100 novels of greatest importance and describe each choice as either major, significant or of secondary importance. The delegate is then asked to select "the ten best Canadian novels", nominate works not included in the ballot, and choose "ten of the most indispensable works" in genres other than the novel.

"We hope that this ballot, along with the other conference sessions, will help to determine which Canadian novels have become established as major works," says conference organizer E.B. Ingles, U of C rare books and special collections librarian.

"This is the first attempt of its kind to celebrate the best of our literary tradition," he adds.

Although literary merit was the primary consideration in deciding upon works to be included in the ballot, there were some exceptions.

"Because I am viewing these titles partially from the perspective of teaching Canadian literature, I have felt justified in including some works of historic or developmental interest," comments Ross.

"Although such works may not always be up to the same literary standard as other novels, they are important for a full understanding of Canadian literature and the various directions it has taken," he adds.

Other conference sessions will deal with contemporary standards in the Canadian novel, regionalism and the Canadian novel, themes in the Canadian novel, and the two cultures in the Canadian novel. There will also be readings, a festival of Canadian films based on novels, and a book fair.

The conference is open to the public and is being sponsored by the U of C Library in conjunction with the department of English and the Humanities Institute. The Canada Council is also providing partial funding, as is the Alberta department of culture.

AUCC RESPONDS TO THE GREEN PAPER ON AMATEUR SPORT

Dr. D. Macintosh, director of physical and health education at Queen's University, presented the AUCC brief in response to the green paper on fitness and amateur sport at the Ottawa hearing on January 14. The brief welcomes the federal government's initiatives in the development of elite athletes. It suggests that Canadian universities have a major role to play in that some universities with their unique facilities would be appropriate locations for national teams, provided that these teams do not compete in regular intercollegiate sports programs. Universities also are suggested as regional centres for physical assessment and sports medicine. The brief identifies several areas where federal government assistance would be welcome: travel equalization for intercollegiate competition; subsidies for salaries and advanced training of coaches; grants for applied research in sport and physical fitness; development of new sport-related university programs and the further development of intercollegiate sports for women. The AUCC also offered to assist in the preparation of the green paper on fitness and recreation promised by the minister for the near future.

ONTARIO PROFESSORS OBJECT TO PROPOSED HUMAN RIGHTS LEGISLATION

The provincial organization representing Ontario's Professors (OCUFA) and the CAUT have rejected the recommendation of the Ontario Human Rights Commission that universities be required by law to promote the Ontario Human Rights Code. The organizations say that the proposed teaching of human rights issues and government review of textbooks and other learning materials is contrary to faculty concepts of academic freedom. Though the faculty association agree with the spirit of the proposals, they seek clarification of the methods of implementation. The brief urges the Ontario government to ensure that no policy of censorship be adopted whereby materials could be banned from university libraries or courses. The brief also requests that universities be clearly placed under the Human Rights Code and recommends that the meaning of citizenship under the code be broadened to include landed immigrants and persons in Canada under ministerial permit so that universities can hire qualified foreign scholars under current guidelines on the Canadianization of universities. For further information on the OCUFA-CAUT brief contact Sam Barber at OCUFA: (416)979-2117.

YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROJECTS

Young Canada Works applications and information sheets are available now at the Canada Manpower Centre on Campus. Deadline for submission of applications is February 17. University administrators and faculty who are planning a summer project to employ students should contact the Canada Manpower Centre on Campus.

BASKETBALL HUSKIES

Millions of viewers in the United States watched the Saint Mary's Basketball Team play an exhibition game against a team from Georgetown University. The "Huskies" lost the game but the real winners might have been the scientific community.

The two teams took part in an experiment to show the effects of stress on the heart. The Coach of the Georgetown team (formerly the Assistant Coach of the U.S. Olympic Gold Medal Team) and a Georgetown player were wired with electronic recording devices which monitored the reactions of stress on the heart. The game was taped by CBS Television and was used as part of a medical program "Stress and Competitiveness" and shown on the CBS National Network in the United States.

The Georgetown game was part of the Team's visit to Washington, D.C., and part of an American Exhibition Tour which also took them to New York and Boston.

The Museum contains the aerospace collection which includes many of the most significant aircraft and spacecraft that have taken us from Kitty Hawk to the moon and beyond.

The Basketball "Huskies" will be seen on the CBC Television Network, Saturday, February 4th., at 1:30 p.m. on "CIAU Basketball"; they will play the Acadia "Axemen".
