Science Saturday returns to Saint Mary's

welcome by Dr. D.H. Williamson, Dean of Science. Then the visitors will divide into small tour groups, each group exploring three of the many displays from the Departments of Astronomy, Biology, Chemistry, Engineering, Geology, Mathematics, Physics and Psychology. Some of the displays planned for this year include a slide presentation on research being conducted by astronomers at Saint Mary's and elsewhere; an explanation of the eruption of volcanoes, with special reference to Mount Saint Helens; computer science projects and computer games; and a demonstration of the biological approach to human behaviour from the Psychology Department.

Science Saturday was last held in February of this year and it was so successful that it was decided to hold it earlier in the academic year.

Mrs. Murray said that credit for the success of previous Science Saturdays must be given to faculty members and students at Saint Mary's.

Science students build the displays, often demonstrate the experiments, and direct the visiting students on campus tours.

"Students and faculty are already enthusiastic about this year's event," she added. "There has been a steady stream to my office for cardboard and other materials."

The displays at last February's Science Saturday were well received by the high school students who visited the campus. Most notable among them, commented Mrs. Murray, was a replica of the human heart, complete with a maze of arteries and veins, illustrating the normal functions of a healthy heart. Another of interest was a model of a human being in which the circulatory system, built with clear plastic tubing, could be observed and the various functions of the body could be recorded.

Although plans for this year's event have not yet been completely finalized, it promises to be an interesting and lively Saturday.

If you enjoy lazy autumn Saturdays, quietly strolling about the campus, then beware of November 14. Science Saturday is returning to Saint Mary's for a fifth time and the University will play host to 250 high school seniors and their teachers.

Science Saturday is a chance for students and teachers alike to discover what university science is all about and to explore some of the avenues of teaching and research at Saint Mary's.

Jessie Murray, Executive Secretary to the Dean of Science, is helping to organize this year's event. She explained that 45 provincial and city high schools had been approached and already there was an enthusiastic response from a great number of them.

Science Saturday will begin at 10:00 a.m. with registration, followed by an introductory Storm warning . . .

Last year may have been the year of the 'big snow' but it could happen again. In preparation for the winter season it may be useful to review the University's policy regarding operation in severe weather conditions.

It is the University's general policy to remain open and in full operation. Only under the most severe conditions will a decision be made to close. In these circumstances consideration must be given to the disruption of lectures, scheduled tests and examinations.

If there is an overnight snowstorm in the Halifax-Dartmouth area, announcements will be made on the local radio stations regarding the cancellation of classes and general closure of the University.

Personnel and students are advised not to call the University switchboard because the operators may not be able to get to work and, in any case, a flood of calls will overload the switchboard.

The decision to close the University is usually made by the President. Once the decision is made the Director of Information and Public Relations informs the media so that a public service announcement can be made as early as possible.

If a serious snowstorm develops during the day then as soon as a decision regarding closing the University is made, the Personnel Officer will inform all employees. Telephone calls may be directed to the Personnel Office for information.

Police on campus

Photographs and story by Liz Stevens

Const. Gary Green of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

During the past few years more and more police officers, parole officers, social workers, and people from many professions, have been attending classes at Saint Mary's; most of them in the Criminology program.

A lot of the students are police officers, and some of them, because of time constraints, arrive in patrol cars or in uniform. Sometimes class time cuts into a working day and the time has to be made up later.

However, a police officer on campus carrying an armload of books is an uncommon sight, and it usually prompts the question, "Why do police officers go to the University?"

Although the most obvious answer is that taking university courses enhances possibilities for promotion, the real motivation goes deeper than that.

Here is a short profile of three of our students who talk about their motivation and what it's like to be a police officer.

"Prior to taking courses," says Const. Gary Green, "things were basically black or white; I assumed that people knew when they were breaking the law. But it became obvious that it wasn't that simple. After taking a course in social deviance, I became aware that some people think their actions are justified; they feel they are right and society is wrong."

Const. Green was an RCMP officer for seven years before taking university courses, first at the College of Cape Breton, then at Mount Saint Vincent, then Saint Mary's.

He explains, "Most people have little concept of what it is like being a police officer; we see things—children battered and mistreated, accidents, senseless crime, innocent people suffering—and most of these things are outside most people's every-day dimensions.

"Even to have a theoretical clue as to 'why' helps me understand the situation and environment."

A police officer's life is usually not easy mainly because the hours are irregular; there's a high level of stress and therefore emotions are sometimes stretched to the extreme. The divorce rate among police officers is very high.

"Our personal lives suffer, principally because we can't talk about our work at home or we avoid talking about it. When I go home at night, I want to leave it all behind me. Keeping everything inside causes problems.

"I've always been police orientated, and I believe police officers are born, not made."

Const. Green was born in Newcastle, New Brunswick and graduated from high school there. He was going to be an electrician but the idea of being a police officer was always in his mind.

"I think I was always inclined to police work. I got hit by a car when I was five years old. I was on my bicycle on the street, directing traffic, and that was in the days before television.

"A police officer lives in a world of conflict and one has to in some ways defend his or her own values. It's fascinating and I'm not sorry I became involved but there are a lot of memories and experiences I might be better off without.

"The criminology courses at Saint Mary's have been excellent. They centralize many of the experiences that an officer deals with over a period of time into one place, a classroom, where an indepth evaluation can be made."

Const. Maureen White is the first female police officer who does regular patrol in the Dartmouth Police Department.

"I was taking child study courses at Mount Saint Vincent. I had the feeling that I was in the wrong field, so I had a talk with one of my professors who thought I might do well in police work. So I made the decision to apply to the Atlantic Police Academy in Charlottetown, but I knew they only took eight women each year (out of 400 applicants). Well, you'd have to be exceptional to get accepted and I didn't think I was exceptional, but I did get accepted.

"I went to the Academy for a year and I worked with the Amherst Police Department for three months before coming to Dartmouth.

Const. Maureen White of the Dartmouth Police Department.

"And yes, I think female officers do have difficulties. Most male police officers just aren't used to working with women, but I don't have any problems here with the Dartmouth force."

Constable White's face lights up when she talks about the other police officers she works with and the Dartmouth Police Department. Currently, the officers work 12-hour shifts and work alone, not with a partner.

"There may be a couple here who don't think a woman can do the job, but no one has ever said anything. I know there's someone there if I need help, and they know I'm there if they need help.

"I was probably fairly naive when I started and a lot of the courses I've taken in criminology have helped, especially a course in social deviance where we learned about subcultures—skid row alcoholics, prostitutes. They have their own rules and customs. I look at them differently now; they're fascinating people.

"But I do know that most female offenders don't like to deal with female police officers; I think that is going to take a while to change.

"My work hasn't done any real damage to my personal life, but there are places I can and can't go. I'm always a police officer in most people's eyes whether I'm in uniform or not and sometimes people feel ill at ease. I think that most police officers' friends are other officers.

"And you have to have a boyfriend or a husband who is—I think tolerant is the best word. I'm very lucky in that respect; I found an exceptional person.

"The hours that I work aren't the best; there's over-time and because of the stress involved, moods and emotions get stretched, mostly regarding things that are job-related and they're best left there. It's difficult going home and winding down.

"But my job is very important to me; I love it."

"I've wanted to be a police officer ever since I can remember," says Const. Wallace Caldwell of the Halifax Police Department.

Constable Caldwell is currently taking courses in the criminology program. After graduating from Sydney Mines High School, he applied to the Halifax Police Department and was accepted. He received his training at the Halifax Police Department.

"I go to class two nights a week at Saint Mary's. One class is 'Corrections'—it's about the history of punishment and jails, methods to correct deviant behaviour; it has given me a better understanding of what the courses are supposed to do and how the whole judicial system works.

"The other one is on community issues and public relations. We have to look into such topics as mercy killing, sexual assaults, abortion, etc., and then we prepare a class presentation on the subject. One of the things that I found particularly interesting is that there is a direct relation between learning disabilities and juvenile delinquents. It has increased my understanding of youngsters who have problems like that."

According to Constable Caldwell the main value of the course is that "more education is always helpful, and hearing other people's views is always helpful".

As a member of the Halifax Police Department for six years and in the mounted division for two, Constable Caldwell is stationed in Point Pleasant Park.

"I guess my present job here in the Park is a lot different from most other officers. I'm not exposed now to the kinds of things that other officers are, although I have been in the past. There's a lot of cruelty in the world but somehow police officers have to learn to leave it behind them when they go home. I guess I've learned to deal with it.

"I get a lot of satisfaction from my job. I like horses and I appreciate the closeness with people. Everyone talks to me here; I'm much more accessible that if I were in a car.

"We patrol the Park all year long, not just in the summer as some people think, and I think the Park is safe because it is patrolled by officers on horses. It does get some bad publicity sometimes but actually the crime rate is very low."

Constable Caldwell went on to explain, as he saddled 'Sam' whose official name is 'King', that "there are other departments within the Halifax Police Department where I'd like to work because I think the experience would be valuable and there are lots of opportunities there. I don't lean toward any specialized type of police work, but I do know that I will always be a police officer.

Const. Wallace Caldwell of the Halifax Police Department.

Commerce students campaign the United Way

Don Smart, a Commerce student, and Dr. Patricia Fitzgerald of the Management Department organize the volunteer students at the start of the United Way campaign.

Students from the Faculty of Commerce spearheaded a United Way campaign blitz to solicit donations from small businesses in the Metro area. Each of the companies with fewer than 20 employees was forewarned in a letter that the students would be knocking on doors on Friday, October 16.

Most of the students are enrolled in the Faculty of Commerce, although volunteers from the other Faculties were also involved. Don Smart, a Commerce student, organized the blitz with the full support of the Commerce Society and assistance from Drew Franklin and Dave White of the Commerce Society Executive.

Dr. Patricia Fitzgerald, Chairman of the Management Department and a member of the United Way Campaign Committee, explained that the students attended training sessions conducted by United Way representatives a few days prior to hitting the streets. In teams of two, they covered the Metro area including Halifax, Dartmouth, Bedford and Sackville.

The original goal of $14,000, set by the United Way Executive, was unfortunately not reached; less than $5,000 was collected during the one-day blitz.

Dr. Fitzgerald admitted the results were disappointing but added that it was good experience for the students. The campaign would continue, she added, with canvassing by mail and telephone in an attempt to reach the target.

News from the Institute of Human Values

The Institute of Human Values recently received a grant of $3,000 from the Secretary of State in support of Workshop '81, which was held at Saint Mary's last May. The workshop was entitled "The Interdependence of Personal and Social Values", and brought together a number of distinguished scholars who had taken part in previous conferences held by the Institute between 1976 and 1978.

As a result of the workshop, a number of the participants agreed to contribute to a volume of essays on the same theme, which will be edited by Dr. John MacCormack, Director of the Institute.

Recently, the Institute received a grant of $1,500 from Union Carbide Canada Ltd. in support of the Institute's general operation. This gift represents continued support of the Institute by the corporation dating back to 1976.

The Institute has introduced a series of 'problem seminars' under the aegis of particular University departments. Each seminar examines a contemporary issue in an interdisciplinary and cross-cultural context. The first, "Work and Alienation", has been organized by the Department of Management under the chairmanship of Dr. Shripad Pendse and will focus the resources of members of the Faculties of Commerce and Arts on the problems of productivity in the work place. The seminar is open to Arts and Commerce students.

An instructional kit, entitled "It is just a rat-race" and designed for values education in schools, has been attracting considerable attention. Last January, Dr. MacCormack gave a workshop on the subject to the Social Studies Department of Dartmouth High School. A second workshop was offered to the regional staff of the Department of Secretary of State in May 1981. On October 17, the Director gave a talk on the kit to the local branch of the Canadian College of Teachers. In the near future he intends to introduce it to Education classes at Saint Mary's and Mount Saint Vincent Universities.

The Institute of Human Values is organizing "The Halifax Seminar", which will focus the intellectual resources of the region's academics on 'the interdependence of personal and social values'. A talk by Dr. W. Van den Hoonard of the Department of Sociology at the University of New Brunswick, will be presented on March 25, 1982 at Saint Mary's.

On Wednesday, December 9, in conjunction with the International Education Centre, the Institute will sponsor a panel discussion on the theme of "Human Rights and Human Values".

In addition to obtaining Bachelor of Arts and Master of Music degrees from Yale, she was the principal cellist with the Yale Symphony Orchestra from 1969 to 1973. Art Gallery searches for new talent

Dr. James Darley discusses his submission to last year's Faculty, Staff, Student Exhibition with Greg Sedgwick a Commerce student.

Are you an artist in professor's garb? Do you have a treasure-house of photographs lurking in some old, forgotten trunk? When you ask a new acquaintance to 'come up and see my etchings', do you have etchings to show her? If you answered 'yes' to any of the above then now is the time to come out of your closet and display your artistic creations.

The Second Annual Faculty, Alumni, Student and Staff Exhibition will be held at the Saint Mary's University Art Gallery from January 11 to February 21, 1982.

Delighted with the success of last year's exhibition and with the high quality of the works submitted, Leighton Davis, Curator of the Art Gallery, has decided to hold a second show.

Sandra Hamm, the Assistant Curator, is organizing this year's event. She is looking for paintings, drawings, sculptures, mixed media works and photographs. Submissions should be made to the Art Gallery between 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m., any day from Monday, January 4 to Thursday, January 7. All works of art should be framed, if required, and ready to mount or hang, as the case may be. Nails, tape, etc., should also be supplied by the donor.

For further information, please telephone the Art Gallery at extension 116.

Dartmouth artist holds exhibit

On Wed., Nov. 25, Commander C. Anthony Law will open an exhibition of recent works by Dartmouth artist Nelly Beveridge Gray.

Nelly Gray is probably best known for her rubbings, a method of transposing the image of an ancient carved stone onto soft cloth. She held an exhibition of her rubbings at Saint Mary's during the mid-1970's.

The works of art assembled for this exhibition have been kept to a particular theme of walking along a beach and observing how a beach, ocean or swamp forms and makes patterns. She explained that she has endeavoured to analyze and interpret what she saw without being photographic.

"To copy a photograph," she added, "makes art a craft rather than an art."

In talking of her latest works she said that she had tried not to use manmade subject matter but nature, like the patterns on a beach left by stones the tide had washed ashore and abandoned.

She went on to say, "I never work outside and I never take photographs. I make hundreds of drawings to register in my brain and help me remember. Then I work from memory and do not look at the drawings. That way I am not limited to a specified object or colour. I am not restricted in any way."

Nelly Gray's life is an interesting and varied as her art works. Although she has enjoyed drawing since childhood, she did not start sketching seriously until she was working as a private Registered Nurse to an elderly couple in Cranbrook, Michigan. She began to take art classes at the Cranbrook Academy and, in time, graduated with both Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts degrees in Fine Arts. She then went on to New York University and the Pratt Graphic Art Workshop to continue her studies. She is now a member of the American Watercolor Society, from which she received a certificate for Creativity in Painting.

"I remember my first art class," she said, "I was so excited; I said, 'I am an artist', and hugged my freshly dabbled pallet to my chest, depositing all those pretty dabs of fresh oil paint all over my new smock."

The recent works of Nelly Beveridge Gray will be on display at the Saint Mary's University Art Gallery until December 20.

Designer holds exhibition of watercolours.

An exhibition of watercolours by Horst Deppe, Associate Professor of Design at the Nova Scotia College of Art and Design, will open December 4 at the Dresden Gallery on Birmingham St., Halifax.

Professor Deppe is known to many faculty members at Saint Mary's as the person responsible for the award-winning designs of many of the brochures and posters produced through the Information and Public Relations Office. He and his associate at the Art College, Hanno Ehses, have for a number of years been doing most of the University's design work from magazine advertisements in Time or Atlantic Insight to the Admissions Brochure and University Calendar.

Horst Deppe, who was born in Germany, emigrated to Canada in 1955. He has held exhibitions in a number of Canadian cities as well as throughout the province of Nova Scotia, including exhibitions at Saint Mary's University (1967), Mount Saint Vincent University (1968), and the Nova Scotia Travel Exhibition, sponsored by Saint Mary's in 1972. He was among the representatives at the First Exhibition of Nova Scotia Artists, held in London, England in 1965. He has also exhibited award-winning prints in Montreal's prestigious 'Gallery 1640'.

Many of his works are now among the collections of the Art Gallery of Hamilton (Ontario), the St. Joseph's Teacher College (Montreal), the Nova Scotia Museum of Science, the Permanent Centennial Collection of the Province of Nova Scotia, Mount Saint Vincent University, and in private collections.

The Star of Bethlehem: an Astronomer's theory

by Dr. Norman Scrimger, Astronomy Department.

Recent historical research by Dr. Ernest Martin of the Foundation of Biblical Research in Pasadena, California, has placed the birth of Christ sometime in 3 or 2 B.C. (not 6 or 5 B.C. as previously proposed). Astronomers, trying to explain the star of Bethlehem for the more recent time periods found a series of rare configurations between Jupiter and several other planets and the star Regulus during 3 and 2 B.C.

Jupiter became visible in the early morning sky rising about one hour before the sun on August 1, 3 B.C. Venus had been in the morning sky for some time and was moving rapidly toward the sun, approaching Jupiter from the west. At about 4:00 a.m. (local time in the Middle East) on August 12, Venus overtook Jupiter, and the two planets passed in a close conjunction, with their separation approximately two-thirds of one full-moon diameter. The sun had, in the meantime, continued to move eastward against the stars and was about to leave the constellation Leo and enter Virgo. Five days later Mercury became visible in the morning sky just before sunrise. As Venus continued to overtake the sun, it met and passed Mercury in the morning of September 1. Their separation was approximately three-quarters of a moon diameter. These two planets then soon overtook the sun and were lost in the glare of sunrise.

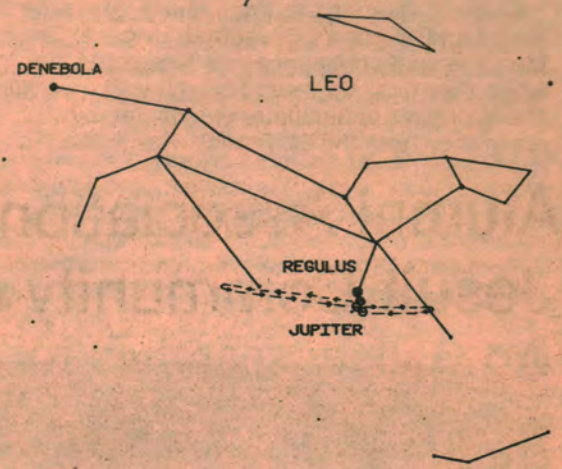

Jupiter and Venus appearing as a single object on June 17, 3 B.C.

Jupiter continued its slow eastward motion and passed Regulus, the brightest star in the constellation Leo, on September 14, 33 days after its conjunction with Venus. Jupiter passed slightly more than one moon diameter to the south of Regulus. By this time the sun was well into Virgo, and Jupiter was rising about three to four hours before the sun. Jupiter continued moving toward the east until December 1, when it began its retrograde (or reverse) motion and headed back toward Regulus. The sun was now in Sagittarius and rose about seven or eight hours after Jupiter. On February 17, 2 B.C., Jupiter (still moving in reverse) passed Regulus a second time, but not quite as closely as the first pass. On March 29, Jupiter again resumed its forward (eastward) motion and passed Regulus for a third (and final) time on May 8, 2 B.C. Jupiter was now rising 18-19 hours before the sun, and therefore setting only about 5 or 6 hours after the sun. It was in the evening sky.

Venus was ahead of the sun and as the sun again approached Leo in July, Venus entered Leo in June. On June 17, 2 B.C., an amazingly rare event occurred. Jupiter and Venus drew together to pass with a separation of less than 1/100 the diameter of the moon. As the sun set that night in the Middle East, the two planets were visible in the west as two very close brilliant points of light. By 9:15 p.m., local time, their separation had decreased so as to be barely discernable. These two "evening stars" appeared to merge completely into one gleaming beacon over Judea as they set in the west at about 10:00 p.m.

The sun overtook and passed Jupiter in early August, and by the end of August, Jupiter was again rising in the morning sky just before the sun. Venus and Mercury were also again morning stars. One final event of 2 B.C. occurred on the morning of August 27. Jupiter passed about one-third the diameter of the moon from Mars, while both Venus and Mercury looked on from within a few degrees. As four of the five known planets met (Saturn was the exception) the sun entered Virgo.

Jupiter passing Regulus three times (because of retrograde motion) on September 14, 3 B.C.; February 17, 2 B.C.; and May 8, 2 B.C.

Astrologically, to the Magi, these planetary configurations would have been very significant. Jupiter was the king and father of the gods, and often was associated with the birth of rulers. Venus represented fertility. The configurations all took place in Leo, the lion, which is associated with the tribe of Judah and hence would be significant for the Jewish people. Mercury, the messenger of the gods, met with Venus twenty days after her first encounter with Jupiter. Jupiter met three times with Regulus, the regal star. Regulus, originally called Rex, was believed for at least 4000 years to rule all the affairs of the heavens and is the one star most associated with the birth of rulers and kings. Venus then met again with Jupiter in the extremely close encounter of June 17, 2 B.C. Such an extremely close conjunction would be of great significance to the astrologers of the day. Finally, two months later, four of the five known planets met in Leo while the sun entered Virgo, the Virgin, at the end of August of 2 B.C.

La Salle: Expedition II Packs the Theatre Auditorium

On Tuesday, November 27, at 10:30 a.m., the McNally Building was under seige as 1400 high school students converged on the Theatre Auditorium. They were there to watch and listen to Robert Cavalier Sieur de La Salle as he narrated his voyage from Montreal to New Orleans in the winter of 1681-82.

During the performance Reid H. Lewis, alias the Sieur de La Salle, narrated a slide presentation on an authentic recreation of the historic voyage by 15 high school students and their expedition leaders, who reenacted the trip as part of a bi-centennial project. The second voyage was a testimony to courage as the crew struggled through the worst winter this century. However, it was also an educational experience; a chance to live a part of the history of North America.

Mr. Lewis presented a morning and evening show and also did two mini-shows during the afternoon, one of which was televised for Halifax Cablevision.

The slide presentation, La Salle: Expedition II, was brought to Saint Mary's by the Arts Council, and was organized by Dr. Paul Bernard of the Department of Modern Languages and Classics.

Reid H. Lewis, a high school French teacher, played the role of Robert Cavalier Sieur de La Salle in the slide presentation, La Salle: Expedition II.

Dramatics Society presents an evening of plays

An evening of three one-act plays will highlight the Saint Mary's Dramatic Society's first production of the new academic year. The plays chosen for the program include the one-act tragedy by J.M. Synge, Riders to the Sea, and two comedies, The Proposal by Anton Chekhov and The Public Eye by Peter Shaffer. All three plays will be presented in room MM 309 of the McNally Building, beginning at 8:00 p.m., on the evenings of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, November 19 to 21.

Riders to the Sea, directed by Rob Candy, a graduate of Saint Mary's, is considered to be one of the finest short plays written in the English language. Set on an island off the west coast of Ireland at the turn of the century, the play presents the ordeal of Maurya, an aging widow who has seen her husband and five of her six sons killed by the sea. She is now reluctant for Bartley, her last remaining son, to make a trip to the mainland over a rough sea.

The Marriage Proposal is a light comedy in which a young landowner and the girl he wishes to marry quarrel constantly over a worthless piece of land. Their continuing differences over this matter mark the amusing progress of their courtship. The Marriage Proposal is directed by former Saint Mary's student Dominic Larkin.

The Public Eye, directed by current Saint Mary's student, Chris Armstrong, is a modern comedy by one of Britain's most successful contemporary playwrights. The 'Public Eye' of the title refers to a very unusual and eccentric private detective who has been hired to spy on the wife of a young accountant.

Words and Women Conference

Words and Women, a discussion of how women's traditional roles have been defined and transmitted into language, was the topic of a discussion by two Connecticut journalists, Casey Miller and Kate Swift, who spoke at Saint Mary's on October 20. The journalists are well respected in their fields and have co-authored two acclaimed books on the subject.

Words and Women was sponsored by the Saint Mary's Women Caucus, the Faculty of Arts and the Faculty of Commerce.
