SOME HIGHLIGHTS IN THE HISTORY
OF
SAINT MARY'S UNIVERSITY

- 1802 Rev. Edmund Burke, vicar general of Nova Scotia had a 2-storey building erected on Barrington Street at Spring Garden Road to serve the Irish of Halifax as a college or seminary. Due to other circumstances the building was put to other uses.
- 1838 Michael Tobin and a group of Halifax Catholics laid plans for Saint Mary's when it became evident that the Nova Scotia legislature was prepared to support higher education on a denominational basis.
- 1840 Classes began at a new site on Grafton Street. The first president was R. B. O'Brien.
- 1841 The Nova Scotia Legislature passed "An Act for Incorporating the Trustees of Saint Mary's College at Halifax". This legislation granted general degree-conferring powers to Saint Mary's.
- 1868 Archbishop Connolly brought the De La Salle Brothers to Halifax and arranged for them to administer Saint Mary's College. The college was moved to a new site at Belle Aire Terrace and Agricola Street.
- 1873 The Nova Scotia Legislature passed a new "Act Respecting Saint Mary's College" and was described as reviving that of 1841.
- 1876 The site of the college was moved back to Grafton Street and the administration was again taken over by the diocese.
- 1881 The government discontinued its policy of making university grants, Saint Mary's had to close and remained so until 1903.
- 1903 Saint Mary's was reopened largely by the work of Archbishop O'Brien. He set aside a portion of ten acres of land on Quinpool Road at Windsor Street which he had earlier acquired for the diocese and erected a new building. The first president of the revived Saint Mary's was a priest of the archdiocese, Monsignor Edmund Kennedy. His successor from 1905 to 1913 was Charles E. McManus.
- 1913 The Christian Brothers of Ireland accepted an invitation from Archbishop Edward J. McCarthy to come to Halifax and take over Saint Mary's.
