FALL 2012

The musical styles of Pictou County singer-songwriter, Dave Gunning, and rap artist, Kayo, are many miles apart, yet as Santamarians, they share a common bond and a common source of inspiration: the time they spent at Saint Mary's.

With this issue of Maroon and White, Saint Mary's celebrates creative endeavors in areas ranging from music and the arts to business, social responsibility, and international development. Whether they're making films, furthering diplomatic relations or lending a hand to troubled youth, Saint Mary's students, faculty, staff and alumni are never short on inspiration.

Please enjoy this magazine, and join me in welcoming Michael McKenzie to his new role as President of Saint Mary's University Alumni Association. With his creative efforts, we will continue to experiment with new ways to inspire our alumni to keep in touch and get involved. We look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Dr. J. Colin Dodds
President and Vice-Chancellor

As the new president of the Saint Mary's University Alumni Association, I can't help but be impressed by the range of activities undertaken by the members of our alumni family. From Belfast and Rio de Janeiro to Ghana and the Turks & Caicos Islands, Santamarians are out in the world pursuing their dreams.

Some of these dreams unfold in this issue of Maroon and White. You'll meet our annual Alumni Award winners; read about the very successful, second annual One World Alumni Dinner; and enjoy colourful accounts of alumni around the globe.

You may even catch up with some old friends in the photos from this year's Homecoming. Always a celebration of memories, associations and athletic triumphs, Homecoming is also a vivid reminder of the strong ties shared by graduates of this University. Please help us strengthen those ties by sending your own updates and ideas. As you will see in the following pages, we are always interested in a good story.

Yours truly,

Michael McKenzie

DINOSAUR DONATIONS

A housecleaning by long-time friends of Saint Mary's has netted the University some interesting artefacts. Mary and Doug Rigby used to travel the world, collecting keepsakes along the way, but recently decided it was time to simplify their lives and de-clutter their home. To that end, they donated two sections of dinosaur bones collected near Edmonton, two sections of Cretaceous era stone, also collected in Alberta, and a replica of a Hominid skull found in 1972 by field staff who worked alongside noted paleoanthropologists Richard and Meave Leakey.

Geology professor Andrew MacRae was delighted with the donation, and said they will all be useful as teaching specimens for paleontology classes.

KUDOS FOR CLEAN CAPITALISM

A strong code of social responsibility and environmental sustainability earned Saint Mary's Sobey School of Business national ranking by Corporate Knights magazine as one of the 10 Best MBA schools in Canada for 2012.

The world's largest circulation publication with an explicit focus on Corporate Social Responsibility, Corporate Knights magazine shines a light on Canada's leading business schools by measuring three main areas of activity: student-led initiatives; course work; and institutional support, such as endowed chairs, scholarships and faculty research. Published quarterly as an insert in the Washington Post and The Globe and Mail, the magazine provides prospective business students with a practical tool for choosing a university.

3 THIS VERY OLD HOUSE

A team of researchers from Saint Mary's University, Université de Moncton-campus de Shippagan, and Mount Allison University discovered what may be Halifax's oldest wooden house. The Morris Building, which narrowly avoided destruction in 2009, has been dated to 1764—just 15 years younger than Halifax itself.

The findings are based, in part, on dendrochronology, a tree-ring dating technique used to examine growth ring patterns on core samples taken from the building's floor joists and, in part, on evidence uncovered by Saint Mary's archaeology professor, Dr. Jonathan Fowler, in historical maps from archives in the United Kingdom, as well as in copies of 18th century deeds at the Nova Scotia Archives. Dr. Fowler landed a solid blow for architectural preservation with the surprise discovery that the Morris Building actually predates its ownership by the Morris family.

4 PEACEFUL SCHOOLS FINDS A HOME

Saint Mary's University is the new home for Peaceful Schools International, a charitable organization, which supports schools around the world that have made a commitment to creating and maintaining a culture of peace.

"This is a dream come true," says Peaceful Schools International founder Dr. Hetty van Gorp. "Since its inception over a decade ago, Peaceful Schools International has never had a permanent designated space to call its home. With its new office in the Homburg Centre for Health & Wellness, PSI can continue to build on our productive relationships."

Saint Mary's University has a long history with peace education and has been a member of PSI for almost nine years. A celebration announcing PSI's new home was held September 21, the International Day of Peace.

5 CHEERS!

The Atlantic Canadian wine industry got a boost with the creation of a new Atlantic Wine Institute this summer, and Saint Mary's University will play a leading partnership role.

Housed in the Acadia Centre for Rural Innovation, the multi-institutional centre will support the region's wine industry with wine research, outreach, and education. Dr. Claudia De Fuentes, a Business Management professor in the Sobey School of Business, will work with the Institute performing social network analyses to identify and study the key agents within the Nova Scotia wine cluster.

"The Atlantic Wine Institute is an important organization with the potential to bring researchers together to foster our wine industry," she says.

6 AFTER THE BIG BANG

As a member of a team that contributed to the development of The Canadian Space Agency's James Webb Space Telescope, Dr. Marcin Sawicki, an astronomer and professor of Astronomy and Physics at Saint Mary's University, is hot on the trail of galaxies and stars that formed after the Big Bang.

Dr. Sawicki and his team are responsible for the Fine Guidance Sensor (FGS) and the Near-Infrared Image and Slitless Spectrograph (NIRISS), a highly advanced, two-in-one instrument. It will allow the James Webb Space Telescope to study stars and galaxies that formed near the beginning of time and seek planets orbiting other stars.

He and his team are looking forward to the instrument's integration and the eventual launch of the Webb Telescope in 2018.

SAINT MARY'S GRAD SELECTED FOR MARS MISSION SIMULATION

Many of us cringe at the thought of the same boring meals over and over. But for Saint Mary's graduate, Simon Engler, the challenge of maintaining a diverse and healthy diet is all the more difficult. Engler is part of a six-person team will simulate a mission to Mars by living in isolation on a barren lava field in Hawai'i.

Engler (BSc'01), will be a crew member on a mission known as HI-SEAS (Hawai'i Space Exploration Analog and Simulation), part of a NASA study to combat menu fatigue, one of the greatest food challenges faced by astronauts during multiple-year missions to Mars or the moon. A voyage to the Red Planet could take from two to three years, and over this time, astronauts tire of eating foods they normally enjoy. They tend to eat less, which can lead to a variety of problems.

NORTH EAST CAMPUS TAKES SHAPE

The $15 million revitalization of the North East corner of campus as a new and exciting entry point for the University is well underway. The foundation for a three-storey, 28,500 square-foot building was completed late in the summer and steel framing now offers a skeletal-view of the project. When it is completed in August 2013, the, as yet, unnamed building will be the new home for the Teaching English as a Second Language program and the Saint Mary's Business Development Centre which is currently located downtown.

LOOKING FOR SUSTAINABLE SOLUTIONS AROUND THE GLOBE

Saint Mary's was recently named host University for a $4 million international project investigating the best environmental management practices on the planet.

"We're looking for the best ways that local communities are working to protect the environment," says lead researcher, Dr. Tony Charles, a Saint Mary's Environmental Science and Business Professor. "Conservation efforts look different from place to place. By identifying the commonalities, we can map out the best practices at a local level. We will also help governments understand how to better support community conservation initiatives. So this is not research that will sit on the shelf."

The new Community Conservation Research Network encompasses 11 study sites worldwide with a focus on three in Canada: Nova Scotia, Labrador, and Vancouver Island. A Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada Partnership Grant provides $2.5 million in funding, with the remainder contributed by individual participants and project partners.

UNIVERSITY WELCOMES 50,000-YEAR-OLD PROFESSOR TO FACULTY

The latest addition to the Saint Mary's community is a model professor who is wise, cultured, and has made his roots in France, Italy, Iraq, Belgium, Israel and Germany. And if Professor Bonesworth seems a little stiff at times, it's because he's a complete, fully-articulated Neanderthal skeleton.

Cast from real Neanderthal bones using a custom-formulated polyurethane resin, Bonesworth is a breath of fresh air for the Department of Anthropology at Saint Mary's University. "I think it will be quite beneficial for students," says Department Chairperson Dr. Paul Erickson. "Neanderthals are the subject of much scientific debate as to whether they are like humans, so it makes for terrific comparisons with complete modern human skeletons. As well, it brings to life the fossils we study in paleoanthropology, the part of anthropology that deals with human evolution."

Like any upstanding Neanderthal, Dr. Bonesworth has his own Twitter account. Follow him at twitter.com/ProfBonesworth □

Making the Cut

By Suzanne Robicheau

Saint Mary's grad, Jeff Cusack (BA'10), had his camera rolling this spring when a simple show of support for a football team turned a quiet Belfast square into a noisy political protest.

"It was amazing to see this beautiful, peaceful square transform so quickly," said Cusack, an independent filmmaker who followed 14 Saint Mary's students participating in the seventh year of the University's Northern Ireland Conflict Resolution Project.

"It was really the perfect scene to illustrate how deeply political and religious tensions have crawled down into the everyday lives of the people."

From the late 1960s until 1998, fierce and violent clashes involving paramilitaries and security forces dominated life in Northern Ireland, leaving more than 3500 people dead. Today, while the daily violence is gone, the divide between Catholics and Protestants remains.

In Ireland, Cusack and his partner/director Everett Stone filmed more than 190 hours of footage that will serve as the backbone for the documentary, Belfast: Students in Conflict, an effort to raise awareness about the continuing struggles of Northern Ireland as seen through the eyes of students trying to make a difference.

"It's my passion project," he says of the effort that has him sorting through footage and refining a script. It takes about 25 hours a week when he's not working at the IWK hospital. "It's pretty intense."

"Fundamentally this is a story about a society whose divisions became so deep that they lead to violence," says Cusack. "In a world that is becoming increasingly partisan, the lessons of Northern Ireland need to be understood now more than ever."

Cusack said he hopes the scenes with students laughing and playing alongside spiked, barbed wire fencing and protective glass barriers gives viewers pause to reflect.

"Some of these schools have things, like razor wire, that you would expect to find at a military base."

Still reeling from the excitement of seeing their film aired in May at the preeminent Cannes Film Festival, Saint Mary's arts grads, Ashley McKenzie and Nelson MacDonald, had more cause to celebrate in September when their film, When You Sleep, premiered in the Short Cuts Canada program at the Toronto International Film Festival.

"We've had a good few months," says director McKenzie. "This kind of national recognition is a big deal for us, and a tribute to our entire cast and crew."

McKenzie and When You Sleep co-producer, MacDonald, have been friends since they attended high school together in New Waterford. Arriving at Saint Mary's in September 2003, they both majored in English with a minor in film studies.

"We knew that we wanted to make films," says Nelson, "but we decided it was important to learn about the world before we learned about using a camera. In the end, our philosophy classes at Saint Mary's have been as important to our work as any technical courses we've taken."

As an unconventional plug for philosophy courses, MacDonald and McKenzie's first film, Rhonda's Party, won best Canadian short at the Young Cuts Film Festival in Montreal; made CBC's 2011 Short Film Face-off; and received ranking from the Toronto International Film Festival as one of Canada's top 10 short films of 2011.

Both Nelson and McKenzie are quick to pay tribute to the many influential professors they had at Saint Mary's, and to express their appreciation for the invaluable guidance and support received from former Film Studies coordinator, John MacKinnon.

"Ashley and Nelson are very proud of their affiliation with Saint Mary's," says Dr. MacKinnon. "They're fine people and strikingly honest as film makers."

Now based in Halifax, the pair will celebrate their latest coup by scouting a location in Cape Breton for a gritty drama they're shooting this fall.

"We had to go away to learn," says McKenzie, "but the plan has always been to make films in New Waterford." □

Conceived and organized by Saint Mary's University's Conflict Resolution Advisor Bridget Brownlow, the Northern Ireland trips are rooted in Saint Mary's belief in the importance and relevance of engaged and experiential learning. In preparation for their 10 days in Belfast, students receive training in conflict resolution and have the opportunity to facilitate conflict resolution workshops with children and youth in local schools.

Cusack and Stone, still virtual unknowns in the film industry, raised $5,000 for the project. The remainder will be financed on their credit cards.

The Saint Mary's community got a sneak peek at some of the footage on September 21 during a celebration marking a Peaceful Schools International event on campus.

"It was awesome," said Brownlow. "Now I can't wait to see the finished video."

Cusack hopes the final project will be completed by March 2013 and that the team will be able to announce a video or a television deal. □

Ready...Set...ACTION

On a sweltering July morning the lawn in front of the McNally building is uncharacteristically abuzz with activity. Giant, black screens bounce and diffuse light, camera operators jockey for position and a make-up artist checks the foreheads of a dozen actors sweating in the sun.

In an instant, the crew shooting the second season of the CBC hit comedy series Mr. D goes silent, and you can now hear every thud of a sneaker hitting the sidewalk as a student jogs by. She passes. The director calls, "Finals. Background... action Gerry!"

Comedian Gerry Dee walks in to frame as Mr. D and begins a scene with his on-screen students. His attempts to answer student questions with comically concocted answers are foiled when Jonathan Torrens joins the scene as Robert Cheeley, vice principal of Xavier Academy.

Inside a nearby tent a half-dozen members of the crew escape the heat and watch the action from two monitors, chuckling along as the scene is shot again and again, sometimes with just a subtle change of language or tone. With episodes taking several days to shoot, one scene can take up the better part of a morning.

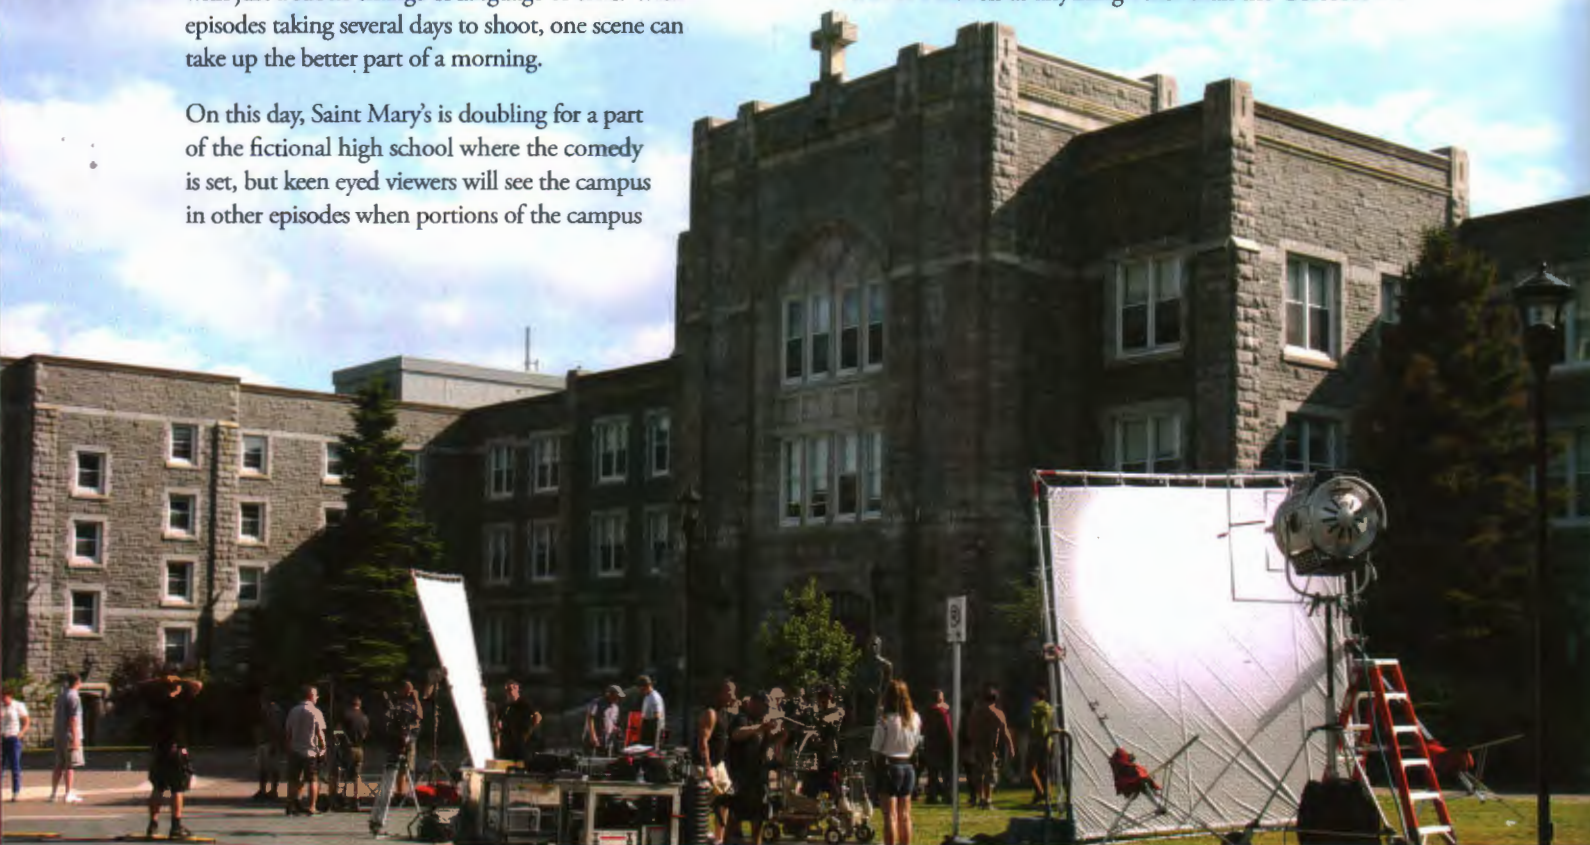

On this day, Saint Mary's is doubling for a part of the fictional high school where the comedy is set, but keen eyed viewers will see the campus in other episodes when portions of the campus were transformed in to look like a medical clinic, an ivy league school in the U.S., and as the backdrop for a traffic accident. The Gorsebrook Lounge routinely doubles as Barrels, the pub where Mr. D and his colleagues gather. But it's not just the campus that has a connection to Mr. D, however.

The show's key makeup artist for season two is Amanda O'Leary, a Saint Mary's graduate of 1997 (BA Psychology) and its Executive Producer, Mike Volpe, graduated in 1989 with a BA in Political Science. He is best known for his work on the Trailer Park Boys series.

For O'Leary, the return to Saint Mary's was a bit of an eye-opener to the recent development on campus. "It's kind of surreal," she says. "I'm wowed at just how much the campus has changed. When I was here there was one computer in the library with a sign-up sheet and a 20 minute time limit to use it to write papers. I'm totally blown away to see how things have changed."

"I loved going to Saint Mary's and so it's hard for me to see Mr. D's Barrels as anything other than the Gorsebrook." □

FOR UNCONVENTIONAL

A Review of Mr. D by Assistant English Professor Dr. Jennifer VanderBurgh

When Pink Floyd demanded “no dark sarcasm in the classroom,” (The Wall), they might have made an exception for Mr. D. The show’s opening lyrics exemplify an ironically self-deprecating sense of humour.

Faking his way through year one of teaching, Mr. D’s main character, Mr. Duncan (Gerry Dee), advises female students not to swim in the ocean during their menses (sharks!) and proposes curriculum on the “underground railroad” (his definition: the subway). Unlike most shows about high school, students don’t see classes as an obstacle to their social lives; they see Mr. Duncan as an impediment to their education.

Shot partly on-location at Saint Mary’s, Mr. D is a fairly unconventional dramatic comedy about high school, loosely and hyperbolically based on the nine-year teaching career of stand-up comic, Gerry Dee.

Usually, high school TV shows reassure kids that life will be okay. Standard take-home messages support the idea that people who work hard with good intentions will find their just rewards: lasting love and a good job. While high school is a place of struggle in these shows, the idea is that once teens figure out who they are “meant to be,” life will get much easier.

Teachers in these shows, having already achieved a good job, present a narrative challenge. If they feature at all as characters, their obstacles are not usually to do with the job, but with social problems to be fixed by working at high school, essentially going back to learn what they missed the first time around.

Unlike conventional TV teachers, Mr. Duncan fails professionally and socially. As a trained gym teacher assigned to teach social studies, he is painfully inept. He teaches erroneous information with conviction and tries, usually inappropriately, to ingratiate himself to his students as a “cool” teacher.

Now, with season two in production, Mr. Duncan’s job performance in season one is the “first offense on the mix.” This phrase is from the legendary Canadian Hip Hop hit single, “Let Your Backbone Slide” (1989) by Wes William’s (Maestro Fresh Wes) who plays Mr. Dwyer. He is the teacher whom students refer to with great affection as “Mr. D.” Together, the two Mr. Ds function as opposites, and while viewers conveniently do not get to peer inside Mr. Dwyer’s classroom to witness his exemplary teaching, he must be doing something right to earn the moniker, “Mr. D.” □

Commerce Grad Makes Waves on East Coast Music Scene

Introductions can be confusing for recent Commerce grad, Filbert Salton (BComm'12).

"It's hard to keep it straight sometimes," says the young man known by room-mates as "Filly"; by friends from the Caribbean as "Filo"; and to the music industry as Kayo Guevarra—a rising rap star who celebrated completion of his course work at Saint Mary's by signing a recording contract with EMI Music Canada and playing a seven-city tour as the opening act for hip hop pioneer, Snoop Dogg.

Growing up in St. Lucia, Salton was the kid who could hear a song once and then sing all the words. After a while, he began writing his own lyrics and discovered a whole new avenue for self-expression. "I was never really outspoken as far as emotions were concerned," he says, "but I always had these feelings that I wanted to express."

After that, there was no turning back. At the age of 14, Salton decidedly called himself a rapper. "I just knew I wanted to make it my thing."

He credits his island culture with the musical approach on The Escape Movement, his released mixtape, along with his upcoming full length album with EMI Canada. "I have a Caribbean flavour that I can add to my music," he explains, "and it gives me a totally different vibe."

Rap vied with high school for Salton's attention, and he dreamed of going to Canada to pursue a career in music. In order to make his family comfortable with the move, he committed to studying Commerce and enrolled at Saint Mary's. "I majored in Marketing, because I knew that it would go hand-in-hand with what I wanted to do," he says practically.

Salton didn't broadcast his rap persona to professors and classmates, but more and more, they began to recognize him as Kayo. "No one at school treated me any differently," he says. "They thought it was cool that I did music, but that's about it. That kind of created a sense of normalcy for me, and helped me to keep focused on what I had to do."

With a body of songs already recorded in St. Lucia, a stage presence honed in his church choir and school plays, and connections made through Saint Mary's, Salton has what he describes as an edge in the music business. "I really had to network a lot," he says, "but that was fun. Halifax is such an open and welcoming place. It wasn't that difficult to meet people."

Salton's first Nova Scotia performance was at The Gorsebrook's Open Mic. "I guess that's why the University is so important to me," he says. "That's how it really started—just meeting people and getting shows."

And the Marketing classes have been as helpful as he anticipated, most recently proving their worth at a meeting with EMI music reps assigned to his recording project. "I was telling them that I knew how I wanted to market the artist and the product," he laughs, "and I was talking about myself."

Salton plans to stay in Canada, and for the next year, at least, in Halifax, where he says the stars aligned for Kayo Guevarra.

"I graduated from Saint Mary's into my dream career and a signed my contract with EMI," he adds.

"I'm lucky." □

LIFE IS A BEACH

When Saint Mary's alumnus, Stan Hartling (BComm'86, CA), turned his entrepreneurial eye to the Bayer's Lake Business Park in the late 1980's, there was nothing there except empty fields. Ignoring the advice of an industry professional who said the area was better suited for a campsite than a shopping centre, Hartling and his partners built the park's first retail plaza.

"It was a calculated risk," says Hartling, "and it certainly paid off."

With that success under his belt, Hartling spent the next 5 years developing retail shopping malls, residential sub-divisions, large-scale storage facilities and multi-unit residential projects in Nova Scotia. Then, in 1997, he liquidated most of his projects and relocated to the tax-friendly, Turks & Caicos Islands, known now to many as the private enclave of the rich and famous.

"With the idyllic weather and pristine beaches, it's truly a paradise for Canadians," he says.

Hartling could have spent his days sipping pina colodas. Instead, he founded the Hartling Group, a real estate sales and development firm, which has pioneered almost $300 million worth of property development and earned a slew of awards including a Lifetime Achievement Award (Star Awards); Developer of the Year (Caribbean World Home and Living Magazine); and and the prestigious Best Spa Resort, Caribbean for the Regent Palms Resort (World Travel Awards).

"I saw opportunities in the Turks & Caicos," says CEO Hartling. "With direct flights from Toronto and New York, travel time compares favourably to the drive to a summer cottage."

Hartling asked himself what would convince people to invest in the Turks & Caicos and found his answer in a rental/ownership concept that was gaining momentum at the time.

"People like the idea of having a holiday home, but they don't want the responsibility of looking after it. They also like the idea of generating income when they're not using it."

In 1996, he purchased a parcel of beachfront land in Providenciales and got to work as general contractor on The Sands at Grace Bay, a 90-unit condo resort that is maintained by his management team and rented out when owners are not in residence.

After completing The Sands in December 1998, Hartling and local partners took on two major projects: The Palms on Grace Bay, a $95 million luxury condo development that sold out in the first six months; and The Shore Club, a 36-unit, low density, villa complex slated for construction in the near future. Next on the horizon are some high-end private villas with their own courtyards, pools, maids and chefs.

"In the Turks & Caicos there's a lack of structure that I really enjoy," says Hartling with a grin. "Doing business here is more like solving a puzzle than following a rule book."

Many clues to the puzzle are found in community involvement. The Hartling Group has provided a kidney dialysis machine for the main island and a 10-seater van for a local orphanage. And Hartling, himself, works with the Turks & Caicos AIDS Awareness Foundation and as a board member for the National Museum.

There are challenges in navigating island life, and in being involved with everything from concept drawings and construction to sales, but Hartling is well equipped to handle them, thanks—in part—to an influential accounting professor at Saint Mary's, who demonstrated that accounting is about far more than numbers.

"As an arts-type, I had planned to get through my commerce degree by avoiding accounting as much as possible," recalls Hartling, "but one of my professors had other ideas. 'You can't learn management from a book,' he said, 'but if I teach you accounting, you'll leave here with a real skill you can use in business.'"

It seems that professor was right on the mark because despite the turbulence of financial markets, there's clearly promise for Stan Hartling in the newly charted waters of upscale Caribbean condominium development.

THE GRAD NEAR IPANEMA

*Sanjeev Chowdhury
(BComm'89)*

Sanjeev Chowdhury (BComm'89) works the room like a seasoned performer, yet there's an earnestness behind the flash—an unmistakable sense of sincerity that emanates from the 43-year-old Consul General of Canada to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

It's June 2012, and Chowdhury, once described by the Mumbai Times as “the dashing young ambassador from Canada,” and more recently by the Rio Times as one of the “Top 10 Foreigners to make an impact in Rio in 2011,” is addressing the Rotary Club of Halifax Northwest as part of a four day, four city tour in the Atlantic Provinces.

“I feel like I'm on tour with Madonna,” jokes the Saint Mary's alumnus, beaming a smile at University President, J. Colin Dodds, “although my schedule in Atlantic Canada is slightly more hectic.”

Chowdhury is in Atlantic Canada to build on shared interests that exist between Brazil and Canada and has an especially receptive audience in this group of Rotarians. It was the Halifax Northwest Club that, in 1989, sponsored the Saint Mary's University Student Association President to a one-year Rotary Foundation Ambassadorial Scholarship at the American Graduate School of International Management.

After graduating from the American school at the top of his MBA class, Chowdhury joined the Canadian Foreign Service, starting in the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade as an officer with the G-7 Summit.

Subsequent postings included assistant trade commissioner in Mumbai and consul general in Ho Chi Minh City, where the “Sanjeev Chowdhury Physiotherapy Centre” exists as a legacy to Chowdhury's tireless fund-raising for children suffering from deformities caused by exposure to Agent Orange.

Returning to Ottawa in 2006 to direct operations on the Afghanistan Task Force at the Privy Council Office, Chowdhury received Canada's “2006 Foreign Service Officer Award,” peer recognition for his achievements in representing and promoting Canada in Vietnam.

Since setting up shop in an office that overlooks Copacabana Beach, he has dedicated much of his time to building a community that involves the 500 or so Canadian nationals who live and work in Rio and a establishing a vital support for Canadian visitors to Brazil—a number estimated by the Consulate to exceed 50,000 a year.

With almost $6 billion in bilateral trade between Brazil and Canada and Canada's ranking as destination of choice for Brazilian students (more than 17,000 in 2010), Chowdhury has a taxing role as Rio's Consul General.

“Brazilians don't do business with corporations,” says Chowdhury. “They do business with people. If they learn over my three-year term that Canadians can be valued and trusted business partners, and if I can get more Canadians to take a look at this exciting market, then I will consider my time in Brazil a success.” □

Putting OTHERS FIRST

*Jane Roy (BComm'84), Founder,
Catapult Leadership Society*

Jane Roy (BComm'84) doesn't much like getting her picture taken. She'd probably prefer to pass on an interview, too. In short, she's not a spotlight seeker. But she was willing to do this story in support of the organization she founded for youth who "have strong potential but few opportunities."

The cornerstone of Catapult Leadership Society is its annual summer leadership camp for 50 students from across Nova Scotia who are entering Grade 10. The first camp was held in 2009. Plans are underway to expand the organization's offerings so camp participants can continue to learn and grow with Catapult programming throughout their high school years.

Roy, who chairs the society's board and works at the camp, says Catapult has "probably been the most rewarding thing I've ever done."

It's also been a family affair with her husband, John (BComm'82), cheering her on since Catapult's inception and her son and daughter volunteering as camp counsellors.

"I hope that we can make a real difference in 50 students every year and those 50 go on to affect other people, so that there's this huge pay forward effect that we will never be able to measure. We hope and dream that that's what happens," Roy says. "I can say I know it's happened, just from some of the stories that the kids and the parents have told me already."

She has also influenced those who work with her, including camp director Julian Maynard. "I admire her effortless, energetic way of making something happen that she believes in. It's very contagious and inspiring," he says. "She's a leader unlike any I've seen. She can see beyond the obstacles to the ultimate goal and then bring us to that goal."

Roy, a Fellow Chartered Accountant, received the 2009 Ross L. Towler CA of the Year Award from the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Nova Scotia in recognition of her volunteerism.

She was founding chair of the Provincial Autism Centre (now Autism Nova Scotia) and creator and founding chair of the then Maritime Medical Care Challenge, a special event involving war canoe races which, in its 15 years, raised over $1.5 million for the IWK and Ronald McDonald House.

She has given greatly to her community, but Roy says she has received much more.

"It just enriches your life in every way you can think of—through the people that you meet, through the experiences, what you learn about yourself, what you learn about other people, and how not to take all the good things in your life for granted." □

On Thursday, September 20th, Saint Mary's Alumni and friends gathered in the Loyola Conference Hall to raise money for some exceptional students. The One World Alumni Dinner kicked off Homecoming 2012 and helped raise money for the Catapult Leadership Society, a camp dedicated to fostering and growing youth in Nova Scotia. Jane Roy (BComm'84), founder and camp director of Catapult described her early experiences at Saint Mary's.

"I was a Catapult kid myself, and I think it was Saint Mary's where I finally started to find myself and develop my confidence."

Roy created the camp because she didn't want students to wait until university to reach their full potential. During the dinner Jane spoke of the hundreds of kids the organization has helped and the hundreds that they hope to help with the expansion of the program.

"When our Catapulters go back home...a lot of them get involved with their school councils...and some kids we lose... which is part of the reason we are expanding, so we don't lose any more kids."

The organization plans to offer mentorship opportunities, high school to university transitioning, summer conferences and more. For more information on the Catapult Leadership Society, visit www.catapultcamp.com

On Friday, we celebrated our Golden Grads of 1962. Each year, the President hosts a luncheon to celebrate grads who have been alumni for 50 years plus. In the early 1960s, Saint Mary's opened its door to female students, and in 1968 SMU graduated its first female student.

Saturday was a day to celebrate, reflect and cheer on our Huskies. The day opened with the Sport Hall of Fame induction for Don Murphy, Robert, "Puddy" Reardon and Bill Scollard. Following the induction was the 1987 Silver Grad Booster lunch in the Gorsebrook pub. After lunch, grads cheered on the Huskies during the Homecoming Football game. The 1987 grad class came back to campus from all over North America. The reunion was organized by Bob Ferguson (BComm'87) and Scott Flewelling (BComm'87).

Homecoming wrapped with the Huskies 5K Fun Run. Friends, family, students and alumni came out to run in what turned out to be a beautiful day. Top racers were Jeff Gaetz, Ashley Ryan, and David Wilson. Thank you to everyone that joined us for Homecoming 2012. We can't wait to see you at our next event!

Golfers Drive Student Support

The greens were fast, the fairways narrow, and the tales were tall as more than 100 supporters of students and student athletes sliced, hooked, and putted their way through 18-holes at the Annual Alumni Golf Tournament at Granite Springs Golf and Country Club on August 23.

“The weather couldn’t have been better and the golfers couldn’t have been more supportive,” said tournament organizer Monica Njoku. “I think everyone appreciated not only the golf, but the opportunity to meet some of the bright students who benefit from the money the event raises.”

Twenty student athletes, each one of whom received a $1000 bursary as a result of the tournament, were on hand to help with the tournament and to chat about their future.

Anastasia Callahan, a Saint Mary volleyball star, told guests attending the tournament banquet that the bursary she received will allow her to pay rent and purchase some key textbooks.

“This kind of support allows each of us to focus on school and to train for our sport without the stress of balancing a job—or at least a second job—to make ends meet.”

While the students were the real winners of the day, the team that played most spectacularly on the course and went home with the tournament championship was team Coca Cola composed of Bobby Johnstone, Graeme Mackenzie, Derek Darcy, Jonathan Boody, and Matt Bishop.

Aecon, Canada’s largest public construction and infrastructure development company, was the tournament’s major sponsor. It has agreed to sponsor the tournament next year as well. □

FACES of SPORT at Saint Mary's

There are many stories behind the three new portraits hanging in Saint Mary's Sport Hall of Fame and Heritage Centre, and countless characters who contributed to the making of sporting legends Bill Scollard, Robert "Puddy" Reardon and Don Murphy.

All-Star Receiver and football captain, Bill Scollard (BComm'89), was the shy one—at least when he arrived at Saint Mary's in 1985. But, he blossomed under the watchful eye of Coach Larry Uteck, playing on three AUS Championship teams and three Atlantic Bowls, including a 1988 Bowl win that took the Huskies to the 24th Vanier Cup game at Varsity Stadium in Toronto, where Scollard was awarded Most Outstanding Offensive Player.

"I don't know where I would be without Saint Mary's," said Scollard, now the Key Account Manager for Labatt, when addressing the 150 friends, family, and fans in attendance at a ceremony for his induction into Saint Mary's Sport Hall of Fame and Heritage Centre.

"The skills I learned in class and on the field set the table for me socially, academically, and in the corporate world."

Sharing the stage with Scollard at that ceremony were fellow inductees, Don Murphy and Robert "Puddy" Reardon, also exceptional athletes, role models, and natural leaders.

"It feels like this is my Olympic gold medal," said Reardon, in a short speech following the unveiling of his portrait. "Saint Mary's has been a huge part of my life, and this is another moment to cherish."

One of the best student athletes at Saint Mary's High School in the 1940s, Reardon advanced to Saint Mary's College, where he excelled in curling, baseball, football, and hockey. He led the College's legendary Junior Hockey team to three consecutive Maritime championships, beginning in 1946.

Induction into the Sport Hall of Fame and Heritage Centre was also an Olympic-class event for football great, Don Murphy. Lauded as the best defensive player in Canadian University football, Murphy piled up honours as an all-Canadian at the linebacker position, an Atlantic Conference All-Star, and runner-up for League Rookie of the Year. He played briefly in the CFL before an injury redirected his considerable talents to a 25-year career as a teacher and school principal. □

FOLLOW YOUR Heart's Desire

In the 1996 film, Jerry Maguire, Tom Cruise made the saying “Show Me the Money” a popular catchphrase for a generation.

But CBC storyteller, author, and Honorary degree recipient Stuart McLean, says the actor got it all wrong. McLean told the 900 graduates at Spring Convocation at the Halifax Metro Centre that the pursuit of money is a big waste of time.

“Instead, focus on following your heart’s desire. Follow your instincts or your tummy, and you will be happy wherever you end up,” he said. “If you are happy, the money will look after itself.”

He reassured graduates that the uncertainty they might be feeling is not a bad thing, especially if they surround themselves with people who expect a great deal from them.

“You don’t have to know the final stop in your journey, only the next one.”

And you shouldn’t fear failure either, added Dragons’ Den celebrity investor Arlene Dickinson, who also received an Honorary degree at the ceremony.

“Learn from your failure. Live by your principles, and do not be bullied or manipulated by someone who thinks they know better. Stick fast to what you believe in. Speak up for what you know is right,” she said.

During the Convocation ceremonies, four other prominent leaders were presented Honorary Degrees in recognition of their commitment to the community. They were: Mayann E. Francis, the former Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia; Robert Pace, communications entrepreneur; Jim Lotz, a trailblazer in community development; and Dennis Deters, a renowned leader in the cooperative sector. □

Sasha Power is a science peer mentor in the Saint Mary's LEAP program

Universities have a range of supports for first year students who face a variety of transitional issues. Thanks to generous funds from The Windsor Foundation, Saint Mary's is expanding a proactive two-year pilot program that addresses these issues before they occur.

Designed to create a sense of connectedness, the LEAP program (Learning, Engagement, Achievement, and Peer Mentors) links first year students in six Faculty-based learning communities in Arts, Business and Science, each comprised of 30 students. With the support of a senior student who acts as a Peer Mentor, and a series of workshops on learning strategies, new students find it easier to establish the academic, social, and life skills essential to post-secondary success.

PREPARING THE CANVAS

Vision is the art of seeing what is invisible to others. –Jonathan Swift

“The LEAP peer mentor and buddy system made my transition to University infinitely better than I expected,” says Mary Sasha Power, a LEAP Science student from 2011. “Having an older student to go to for help and seeing a bunch of familiar faces in those giant lecture halls eased my anxieties and allowed me to focus on succeeding.”

This fall, Mary Sasha Power returned to the LEAP program as a Science peer mentor. Third-year Science student, Katie Ryan, who mentored Mary Sasha in 2011-2012, also returned. Ryan recommends the LEAP Program to every first year student attending Saint Mary's University. “I believe it provides new students with a head start and strengthens their academic achievements,” she says. □

Dave Gunning

By Cathy von Kintzel

First Big Gig in Halifax at The Gorsebrook

It was exam time. Dave Gunning knew full well he should have been cracking the books instead of making music.

Overcome by procrastination and a song idea, he'd forsaken his finance texts and reached instead for the acoustic guitar he kept under his dorm-room bed on the 14th floor of Loyola Hall at Saint Mary's University.

The next day's exam was all but forgotten in the melodies and inspired lyrics that seemed to flow so easily that winter night in 1993, and the piece that emerged, Heading Home, became what the acclaimed folk singer now regards as his first "good" song. It became the first track on his first CD, Lost Tracks, released in 1996, and was nominated for an East Coast Music Award.

Gunning, a third-year Commerce student from Pictou County, had been listening to a lot of Stan Rogers' music.

"I was starting to miss the rootsy things about home," he says. "The whole university experience is very intense. My mind was ramped up. I was feeling a lot of emotion."

Other students' musical tastes, often heard through the doors of the residence's elevator as it moved from floor to floor, ranged from The Tragically Hip to Stompin' Tom Connors.

Still, this new song, sung and played that night for "the guys" on the 14th floor, had members of the highly impressed, impromptu audience waging a campaign to get Gunning a gig at the campus pub, The Gorsebrook.

"They were on a mission," recalls Gunning, who passed his exam the next day and, in short order, had three sets on stage at the campus pub. He knew hundreds of cover tunes and was no stranger to the stage, having played to Pictou County area audiences since he was 15.

"But, that was my first big Halifax gig," he says. "The place was jammed with students, as well as supporters from back home."

It was just the beginning. Before he knew it, he was performing 12 nights a month throughout the city, and earning enough money to cover tuition and rent.

Music became a priority, but it didn't keep Gunning from graduating with a Bachelor Degree in Commerce in 1995, with a major in Marketing. He's one Accounting course short of a double major in Management.

"I have a lot of great memories of Saint Mary's," he says.

As co-owner of the recording studio, Wee House of Music, and with nine CDs to his credit, including the new release, No More Pennies, Gunning has successfully merged his business education with his musical talents. He's performed internationally both as a soloist and with his band. He's also toured with such artists as J.P. Cormier, Stompin' Tom Connors, and John Allan Cameron.

Time and success have given this talented, musical story teller the ability to focus more on singing and songwriting. He performs close to 200 shows a year, and has just embarked upon No More Pennies, a promotional tour of the Maritimes, Ontario, Western Canada, and Australia.

Travel is a given in the music business, and much like the character in his first song, Gunning looks forward to heading home to Pictou County, where he lives with his wife, Sara DeLong, and their three young boys. □
